TO THE CANONICAL BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

BASED ON

KIRCHHOFFER'S 'QUELLENSAMMLUNG'

BY

A. H. CHARTERIS, D.D.

PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL CRITICISM AND BIBLICAL ANTIQUITIES
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH; AND ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S CHAPLAINS

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND SONS

TO

WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D.

TO WHOSE FRIENDSHIP I HAVE OWED MUCH IN MY STUDIES

AND TO

JAMES DONALDSON, LL.D.

WHO NEVER SPARES HIS OWN TIME WHEN HE CAN HELP A FRIEND, AND WHO HAS MADE ME FREE OF HIS VALUABLE LIBRARY
WHILE I WORKED AT THIS BOOK,

I DESIRE TO INSCRIBE IT,

THIS work is based on Kirchhofer's 'Quellensammlung,' which has been out of print for some years. When I began to prepare it, I hoped that Kirchhofer's text might be such a basis that my part would mainly be to revise his extracts, with such merely occasional supplement as recent researches and discoveries might render necessary. But it was soon evident that a reissue must contain much more than this; and from less to more, the work has grown in my hands until it is substantially independent of the 'Quellensammlung,' although the text is still an attempt to collect and classify, rather than to characterise, the passages on which controversy turns. The footnotes have relation to Kirchhofer's in only a few cases; the biographical notes and the Introduction are new. There is a great change in the extracts themselves. New discoveries of MSS, the shifting grounds of controversy, and the special researches of individual scholars, have made it indispensable for the student of theology to have extracts compiled with a view to the state of criticism in our own day.

In attempting to make this compilation, I have used all the helps to which I had access. But it is a pleasant duty to say even in the title-page that Kirchhofer's book is after all the basis of this, and to record here my sense of the obligation under which all students of the subject during the last forty years have been laid by his impartial and trustworthy collection of ancient testimonies. Many of the other works that have been used are named in the notes. I may say that my admiration of Lardner (on whom Kirchhofer almost exclusively relied) has been increased with increasing knowledge of parts of the wide field over which his splendid labours extended. There is even now no book on the whole so indispensable as his. Canon Westcott's works, which have made the subject familiar in our country, are invaluable to every student. I have also owed much throughout to the works of Hilgenfeld, Reuss, Keim, Dr S. Davidson, and the author of 'Supernatural Religion.' Frequent reference is made to the well-known books and articles of Dr Donaldson, Bishop Lightfoot, and Dr Sanday; and to the works of Continental scholars, as Weizsäcker, Wittichen, Volkmar, Aubé, Overbeck, Waddington, Lipsius, Wieseler, Rénan, Gebhardt, Harnack, and Zahn.

The standard editions of the various authors have been used so far as possible; but as experience has taught me how important it is to verify references easily, I have in several of the more voluminous authors (as Origen, Athanasius, &c.) stated the page at which the passage will be found in Migne's edition, which is accessible to almost all students. For Eusebius's Church History, the text of Burton has been on the whole the standard in the very numerous extracts, though Laemmer and Heinichen have been in use. Attention is drawn in the footnotes to the more important cases of doubtful readings in the extracts. In regard to most of the Epistles of the New Testament, a prefatory note in each case indicates the state of the controversy. In footnotes, also, will be found some biographical notices of those authors to whom special reference is not made in the Introduction. The Introduction itself seemed to be indispensable, unless the footnotes were to be extended beyond all reasonable limits. It was originally intended to have a chapter on the avowed grounds of the reception of the Canon in Christendom, especially since the Reformation (see note, p. 33), but I have found that it would be too long for this Introduction, unless it were too meagre to be of use. The series of extracts, pp. 18-31, will to a certain extent tell their own story. I ask permission to refer to an article on the subject of "Canonicity" in this aspect in the 'Brit. and For. Evang. Review,' No. 75 (Feb. 1871). I regret not having in the Introduction an examination of the testimony of Irenæus, but it may be learned from the extracts in the text.

In the course of my work on this book, which has to my great regret been interrupted by causes that I could not control, I have had much help from many friends. Among old students I may especially mention the Rev. Thomas Nicol, B.D., to whom I owe a great part of a first collation of the text of Kirchhofer with that of the standard editions, the chapter on the Clementine Homilies, as also the Analytical Index, and without whom this work would never have been undertaken; the Rev. James Coullie, B.D., who made the careful, and, I think, exhaustive Index; the Rev. J. A. M'Clymont, B.D.; the Rev. William Allardyce,

M.A.; and the Rev. J. H. Crawford, M.A., who have all kindly helped in collation and correction. From Mr R. J. Cownie, M.A., I have had much willing work of the same kind on the whole text after the first one hundred pages. To Drs Donaldson, Sanday, Dickson, and Turpie, and the Rev. Henry Cowan, B.D., I owe more than I can here record in detail. To Professor Weizsäcker, Tübingen, the Rev. W. Pressel, Lustnau, and Professor Christlieb, Bonn, for the encouragement which induced me to undertake the work, and for cheering counsel throughout, my best thanks are due, and I gladly tender them.

That there are occasional errors in the text and in the many references I fear is only too likely, though every effort has been used to avoid them. Those who have tried to do the same kind of work will be most ready to excuse slips and errors where they occur. I am aware that absolute uniformity in the mode of reference to particular authors has not been always maintained; but I trust the passages may be usually found. It is my ambition and my hope that the book may prove useful not only to students of theology in the class-room, but also to ministers and others desirous of investigating for themselves the problems to which so much attention is turned in our times.

INTRODUCTION.

I.—BARNABAS.

THOUGH we have no very early—certainly no contemporary—reference to this Epistle, the first references with which we meet are both explicit and harmonious.<sup>1</sup> Clement of Alexandria, who is said to have written a short commentary upon it, and who certainly quotes it repeatedly, calls it the work of the Apostle Barnabas. Origen calls it the Catholic Epistle of Barnabas. The “Apostolical Constitutions” (date uncertain) quote, or rather appropriate, chapters 18-20 of this Epistle. It appears, therefore, that at the end of the second and beginning of the third century the Alexandrian Church regarded this letter as genuine and important. Neither Clement nor Origen can be fairly charged with assigning to it a place among the canonical Scriptures. But when we find it in the Cod. Sin. after the books of the New Testament, we see grounds for ascribing to it liturgical if not canonical authority in the estimation of the Alexandrian Church of the fourth century. Eusebius (H. E. III. 26) numbers it among the spurious (ἐν τοῖς νόθοις). It is doubtful whether he meant by this that the Epistle was not the work of Barnabas, or merely that it was not canonical. Jerome, however, unhesitatingly calls it apocryphal, though he does not say that it is not genuine. In the Western Church we have no proof (save the existence of an old Latin version of the first seventeen chapters<sup>1</sup>) that the Epistle had at any time a place in the regard of Christian communities. It does not seem to have been known in the west before the fourth century: it was forgotten even in the east after the seventh or eighth.

<sup>1</sup> Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. ex. Can. Rec., Fasc. iv. p. 94) finds Barnabas, c. 18, 21, in the fragmentary Dua viæ vel Judicium Petri. The same passage is also said to be silently appropriated in Apost. Const., Book vii. 1-18. But the whole basis is uncertain, and the dates are hypothetical. This ethical portion of Barnabas, c. 18, 20, which is in some measure a paraphrase of the Sermon on the Mount, corresponds to another paraphrase which is found amongst other matter in the Apost. Const., and parts of it are also found in the short homilies ascribed to various Apostles (John, Matthew, Peter, Andrew, Philip, Simon, James, Nathanael, Thomas, Cephas, and Bartholomew) in αἱ διαταγαὶ αἱ διὰ Κλήμεντος καὶ κανόνες ἐκκλησιαστικοὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἀποστόλων (see Hilg. N. T., Fasc. iv. p. 95 et seq.), which Hilg. regards as the Dua viæ vel Judicium Petri. But while in Barnabas, c. 18, in Apost. Const., c. 1, and in those διαταγαὶ (which are a shorter and probably earlier form of the Apostolical Constitutions), we have a formal beginning, “There are two ways,” &c., we have not such a correspondence in detail as to be of much use in deciding questions of date or authorship; and to appeal to that Dua viæ, &c., in order to decide on the date of Barnabas, is like going from twilight to darkness for a clearer view.

The Cod. Sin. is the only complete Greek text which has been published in full; but Hilgenfeld (1877) made known the readings in another text discovered by Bryennios. The readings in the Cod. Sin. are often corrupt, and in some cases appeal is made by editors to the old Latin version for guidance. (See reference to Bryennios below, p. viii.)

If we ask whether this Epistle is really the work of Paul's comrade, all the early positive testimony which we have makes us answer that it is; but there is no little weight in the negative testimony, which shows us that its reputation was always local, and even in the locality short-lived. The witnesses (Clem. Alex., Origen, and Jerome) were not contemporaries of Barnabas; and their evidence goes no further than to assure us of the repute in which the production was held in their day. Even in regard to Clement's frequent use of it, we must add that while he quotes, he holds himself at liberty to criticise and blame it. There seems to have been in his mind, and still more probably in the minds of those who came after him, an instinctive conviction that even though Barnabas might be the author, the Epistle was not a rule for Christians. And this instinct continued to gain strength until Alexandrian Christians forgot what the rest of Christendom continued to disregard.

Nor is the reason far to seek. The arguments in the Epistle are such as would find their chief popularity in Alexandria; but even there they could only be popular for a short time. They go to prove the superiority of Christianity to Judaism; of inner or mystical knowledge (γνῶσις) to the mere acceptance of the letter of the Old Testament; and what Paul in Galatians had done for all men, his friend was supposed in Alexandria to have done by this epistle in a way specially acceptable to mystics. The coincidence of the author's purpose with that of good men in Alexandria prevented their testing his assertions, or carefully estimating the probability of his being "Barnabas." But the temporary acceptance soon came to an end; and this, in all probability, because the early Church felt what modern critics have almost unanimously agreed in stating. The Barnabas of the New Testament was a Jew, a Levite, more Jewish in his leanings than

Paul (Gal. ii. 13); but the author of this Epistle denounces Jewish sacrifices (c. 2) and Jewish fasts (c. 3) in a way foreign to Paul; he declares (c. 4) that Jews lost their covenant rights when Moses broke the tables of the law, &c. He attempts to describe the ceremonies of the great day of atonement (c. 7), and to treat the red heifer as a type of Christ (c. 8), but is so incorrect in his statements as to show that he "was neither accurately acquainted with the text of the law, nor had even seen the celebration of the day of atonement."<sup>1</sup> His position in regard to Judaism is therefore not that of Barnabas. And another argument against his being the companion of Paul and of the other Apostles may well be found in the famous passage where, desirous of proving Christ's power as a Saviour, he says, "When He chose His own apostles who were to preach His Gospel, He chose those who were lawless beyond the bounds of all ordinary sin, that He might show He came not to call the righteous, but sinners" (ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν ἁμαρτίαν ἀνομωτέρους, ἵνα δείξῃ ὅτι οὐκ ἦλθεν καλέσαι δικαίους ἀλλὰ ἁμαρτωλούς—c. 5). We can scarcely imagine that this was spoken of the other Apostles by one who had known their goodness and truth, and who, if he wrote the Epistle at all, wrote it after the destruction of Jerusalem, when of them all only John survived.

It seems impossible in the face of such internal evidence to accept the statements of Clem. Alex. and Origen; or if they are accepted as to the author's name, we are bound to suppose that this Barnabas was not the companion of St Paul. But for critical purposes, it is perhaps more important to come to some conclusion as to the date than as to the authorship. If it were written by the Barnabas of whom we read in our New Testament, it must be a production of the first century. From the silence of the New Testament as to any proceedings of Barnabas in the last period of St Paul's life, we should not suppose that he was alive at the siege of Jerusalem. This Epistle, however, is evidently written after the fall of the temple—i.e., after A.D. 70.<sup>2</sup>

But this is all that is evident. Some critics have tried to show that at the time when the Epistle was written, hopes were entertained that the temple was about to be rebuilt by Jews in co-operation with Gentiles. It is quite true that he goes on to speak of a spiritual temple; but he is meanwhile speaking of a temple which enemies could destroy, and Jews along with enemies could rebuild, and this must be a material temple. The conclusion therefore is, that we have a date early in Hadrian's reign, before Hadrian turned against the Jews. There is evidence that the Jews did expect him to favour them about this time. Within the short period when this expectation was cherished, our "Barnabas" is supposed to have written,—i.e., about A.D. 120. It must be admitted that some straining is needed to make us fix on that particular time. All that can be fairly concluded from the passage is, that the author seems to have had some idea of a possible reconstruction of the temple, when the Jews, along with servants of Rome (or, according to another reading, themselves acting as servants of Rome), would rebuild it.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> We may here quote from c. 16 the passage on which the question of date chiefly turns. The last sentence is ambiguous, but the whole may be rendered as follows: "Yet again I shall speak to you about the temple, how those ill-fated and misguided creatures set their hopes upon the building, and not upon their God and Creator, as though the mere building were the house of God." Then he quotes Isaiah xl. 12, lxvi. 1, xlix. 17, to show how vain was the Jewish hope; and goes on to quote, "Again says the Lord, Behold, they who destroy this temple shall themselves build it. This is fulfilled, for because of their making war it was destroyed by the enemies. And now also they, and the servants of the enemies, shall build it anew from the foundation." After a little he says, "Let us ask whether there is a temple of God;" and he answers "there is"—but he goes on to show that it is "a spiritual temple built by the Lord."

There is another passage (c. 4) in which the author seems to give an indication of his date by quoting Daniel vii. 4 and vii. 7, but here too certainty fails us. That there are ten kings past, and that a little king would rise to crush three, may be accepted as the meaning; but who were the ten, and who was the eleventh? Who was the first, and who were the τρῆς ὑφ' ἑν? Vespasian, Nerva, and Domitian have been suggested as the eleventh; and the arguments for Domitian would be clear if we could see how to say of Domitian in relation to his predecessors ἐπαπείνωσεν τρεῖς ὑφ' ἑν.<sup>2</sup> As things are, we must pass the apocalyptic riddle by,—perhaps with a suspicion that "Barnabas" himself had no very clear notion how to read it.

There is a reference in Origen (C. Cels., I. 63), who quotes from Celsus some misrepresentation of the character of the Apostles, and adds that Celsus probably picked up the idea from the passage in Barnabas (ὑπὲρ πάντων ἁμαρτίαν ἀνομώτεροι). This shows Origen's belief that "Barnabas" was accessible to Celsus, and indicates for Barnabas a date not later than the middle of the second century. But the date of Celsus himself is not very certain, and we get from this nothing more than a limit.

On the whole, therefore, we cannot be sure of the date. There is in the whole tone of the Epistle, however, something that makes us feel it necessary to regard Jerusalem as in ruins;<sup>3</sup> and Ælia Capitolina, <sup>1</sup> I cannot see that Hilgenfeld, N. T., p. 75 et seq., has succeeded in disposing of all reference to the material temple; or that Dr Donaldson's arguments, p. 267 et seq., bring him to his conclusion, p. 273, for a date within the first quarter of the second century.

<sup>2</sup> The Sibylline Oracles, B. v., say, "Τρεῖς ἄρξουσιν, ὃ δὲ τρίτος ὀψὲ κρατήσκει πάντων." This comes after a description of the Roman emperors down to Hadrian, so that the three are probably Antoninus, Marcus Aurelius, and Commodus. A similar passage occurs in B. viii., where it is said that three reigns come between Hadrian and the end of the world. See Lardner, vol. ii. p. 337.

A.D. 119, as not yet founded. And when we add this to the passage (c. 4) describing an apparent expectation in the writer's own mind that the old temple would be built up again, we may probably conclude with the majority of recent writers that A.D. 119 or A.D. 120 is after all a likely time for it being written. But there is not really any very cogent reason against going back to an earlier time soon after the fall of Jerusalem, and so finding ourselves almost in the very age of the Apostles.<sup>1</sup> That the apostolic Barnabas wrote it, is however an untenable theory.

We next ask to whom the Epistle was addressed. It would take us too long to recount all the opinions on this subject, and the arguments by which they have been supported. We may say in a word, that the author seems to have regarded his readers as an ordinary Christian community,—his arguments being such as all needed, and all might appreciate. He appears to have had a special church in view. The majority were probably Gentiles by birth, but there is nothing to prevent one believing that there was a Jewish element among them.<sup>2</sup>

That the writer himself was accustomed to use Greek we may safely conjecture from c. 9, and from the same passage we may suppose that he was under Alexandrian influence. When he argues that Abraham circumcised 318 persons of his household, and that in doing so he was looking forward to Jesus “embodying the lessons taught by three letters” (ΤΗ λαβὼν τριῶν γραμμάτων δόγματα), he not only speaks as a Greek, but makes Abraham's thoughts run in the same mould! “What, then, was the wisdom (γνώσις) given in this? . . . The eighteen are IH—there you have Jesus (Ἰησοῦς). And because the cross was to express the grace (of our redemption) by the letter T, he says also 300. Thus he shows Jesus in the two letters (IH), and the cross in the one letter T.” “No one,” he complacently adds, “ever learned a more capital bit of knowledge from me than this; but I know that ye are worthy.” From this passage we may conclude that the writer was a Greek writing to Greeks, and probably a Greek trained in the logomachy of Alexandria. It does not seem from the Epistle as a whole that he was acquainted with any of the systems of Christian Gnosticism; but he represents significantly the tendencies to overvalue γνώσις, and to regard the allegorising of Old Testament history as an important branch of γνώσις, which afterwards issued in these systems. In answer to the question whether Barnabas quotes our canonical Gospels, we may refer to the passages in our text. We have as good evidence as can be reasonably required for his use of our St Matthew in c. 4, 14—c. 5, 9; and the other passages, while probably confirmatory of this usage, are not to be regarded as evidence of it. The attempts to find references to Luke are not very successful. From John there is not any absolute quotation, although there are several interesting passages, in which the parallelism of thought is suggestive.<sup>1</sup> The correspondence in thought and theology between this Epistle and the fourth Gospel—still more perhaps between Barnabas and the first Epistle of John—is too striking to be left unnoticed. “The ‘Son of God’ must manifest Himself in the flesh, and come through death and the cross to His kingly power, must bring life and divine abiding—that is in both compositions the ruling thought. He existed before the foundation of the world, was the sender of the prophets, the subject of prophecy, seen before by Abraham, and prefigured in the person of Moses as Israel’s only hope.” So said Keim,<sup>2</sup> in words which are not to be forgotten, though he himself may seem at a later time to draw back somewhat from the conclusion to which they lead.<sup>3</sup> Not only does Barnabas regard Christ’s incarnation in the same way as John does, but the facts of Christ’s life as recorded by John seem to be the indispensable basis of the theology of Barnabas. It is not possible to avoid this conclusion, by speaking of both as products of the Alexandrian school, because the most Alexandrian portion of John—the doctrine of the Logos—is conspicuous by its absence in Barnabas.

<sup>1</sup> Thus Lardner says A.D. 71 or 72. The passage, c. 4, 14 (see our text, under the head of Barnabas), seems to point to a time (not, indeed, when signs and wonders were seen, but) when Israel was utterly abandoned; and one thinks of the abandonment as recent. “Between the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the reduction of the remaining cities of Judea, of which Josephus has given an account after the burning of the temple.”—Lardner.

This leads us to observe further, that the Epistle of Barnabas is so much more theological than Clement, as to have much the same resemblance to it which John has to the Synoptists. It is quite true that he is not a clear theologian; that his use of Old Testament types is hard and over-refined, and that his general disquisitions are cumbersome; and that, as we have seen, his knowledge of Old Testament history and ritual is extremely inaccurate: but all this must not cause us to forget how pure is his theology,—how unfaltering is his faith in the one Almighty Maker and Ruler of all,—and how his constant endeavour is to show that the Son of God was incarnate, and taught, and suffered, and died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living. And when he comes<sup>4</sup> to teach the practical duties of the Christian life, he shows a tenderness of feeling and a beauty of expression that make us almost ready to think that he was none other than the “good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith,” of whom we read in Acts xi. 24.

In conclusion, we may note that in the theology of this Epistle we find no proof of a chasm between the Petrine and Pauline parties in the Church. In the author's views of "life," of "life-giving," of Christ's "blood," of the "forgiveness of sin," we have unstudied agreement now with one, now with the other of the great Apostles. In his view of the Old Testament he is too individual and absurd to resemble any one of the canonical writers; but if some controversialist conclude from this that he is merely "ultra Pauline," he has to account for the other passages where we seem to have an echo of the teachings of John or James.<sup>1</sup>

[The relation of Barnabas to the Fourth Gospel is to be studied as a matter of thought and of theology, rather than of verbal quotation or parallelism. (See Introduction, "Barnabas.") But the following passages are at least suggestive:—

- C. 5, 6. αὐτὸς δὲ, ἵνα καταργήσῃ τὸν θάνατον καὶ τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνάστασιν δείξῃ, ὅτι ἐν σαρκὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν φανερωθῆναι, ὑπέμεινεν.

<sup>1</sup> In regard to quotations from Old Testament Apocryphal Books, we may say that the only one beyond doubt is from Sirach iv. 31 (see Barnabas, c. 19, 9). The other passages (Enoch in c. iv. 3, and c. xvi. 5; Esdras, c. xii. 1; and Sirach in c. iv. 26) are, for various reasons, not to be relied upon as quotations. See Donaldson, p. 304 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, it has been said that the words of Barnabas, c. 5, 13 ("ἔδει γὰρ ἵνα ἐπὶ ξύλου πάθῃ· λέγει γὰρ ὁ προφητεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ· Φεῖσαί μου τῆς ψυχῆς ἀπὸ ρομφαίας"), could not have been written had the author known what John says of the Roman soldier's spear—John xix. 34. But this by no means follows.

II.—CLEMENT OF ROME.

FIRST EPISTLE.

CLEMENT's place in the traditions of the early Church is a very prominent one. After the chief apostles, there is no man to whom the Christians of the second and third centuries more frequently looked back. Numerous works falsely ascribed to him were partly the effect and partly the cause of his celebrity. Several Epistles<sup>1</sup> bear his name; certain "Homilies" and "Recognitions" also; a Liturgy; and the Apostolical Canons and Constitutions. There is now little doubt that the only one of those works which can be fairly reckoned as his is the epistle from "the Church at Rome to the Church at Corinth," commonly known as the First Epistle of Clement. We must accept it as written by him in name of the Church, although no trace of his personal authorship appears in its contents. It is throughout a letter from church to church. Its testimony to the canonical Scriptures is specially important, because it is undoubtedly of very early date.

Until lately, only one MS of this interesting letter was known to exist, and it is incomplete. It forms part of the Codex Alexandrinus (Cod. A) in the British Museum. There was a gap in its contents; but in 1875 critics and students were startled by the appearance of a careful and complete edition published in Constantinople from a MS discovered in the "library of the Holy Sepulchre" in that city. Its editor is Philotheos Bryennios, Metropolitan of Serræ. Six new chapters<sup>2</sup> (containing among other interesting matter a prayer of singular beauty<sup>3</sup>) are added by this new MS to the text of Cod. A. In the same book published by Bryennios is contained also a complete edition of the so-called "Second Epistle of Clement," which is manifestly not an Epistle, but a Homily. The learned and fortunate editor promised to issue in due time the other works found in the same MS volume, including 'The Doctrine of the Apostles,' 'Barnabas,'<sup>1</sup> and the 'Ignatian Letters.'

<sup>3</sup> The prayer—the oldest public prayer of the Christian Church—is partially incorporated in the "Apostolical Constitutions." Dr Donaldson (Theol. Rev., No. lvi.) has pointed out that the prayer claims (c. 59, c. 63, see also c. 56) inspiration and authority, and this in some degree accounts for the reverence paid to the epistle in the early Church. The liturgies of the early Church resemble this prayer in many of their phrases. See Lightfoot's Clement, and also 'Princeton Review,' April 1877, p. 340.

Scarcely was this discovery realised when a Syriac MS of the "Two Epistles" was also found (1876) in Paris. We are now therefore in possession of three MSS, with apparently quite independent testimonies, whereby the text of this early Christian work—"Clement's First Epistle"—can be fairly decided upon.

That it is indeed a very early work there can be no reasonable doubt. Traditional testimony consistently establishes the existence and prominence of a letter of "Clement to the Corinthians," and furnishes us also with a key to its characteristics, as written by him in name of his Church. "The Epistle which you wrote to us by Clement" is the description of it by Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, writing to the Romans about A.D. 170. (Eus. H. E. IV. 23.)<sup>2</sup> It was habitually read in the Church of Corinth in the end of the second century; it was evidently used by the author of the Epistle of Polycarp;<sup>3</sup> and both Eusebius and Jerome tell us that it was still publicly read in some churches in their times. Its position at the end of Cod. A as an appendix to the New Testament, and the even higher honour paid to it by the newly-found Syriac MS, which inserts it in the middle of the New Testament after the Catholic Epistles, can be no ground of surprise. We must conclude that what we have in our hands is the Epistle so highly valued in the early Church.<sup>4</sup>

But still there remain two questions: (1) As to the existence of a Clement with such a position as the general acceptance of his Epistle seems to imply; and (2) as to the reasons for ascribing to Clement the authorship of this particular Epistle.

(1) That there was a Clement of note in the early Church we must accept as a fact, notwithstanding the fabulous additions which have been made to it. Irenæus (B. III. 33) tells us that Peter and Paul gave the office of oversight to Linus (mentioned in 2 Tim. iv. 21); that he was succeeded by Anencletus; and that Clement, who had seen the Apostles, and had conversed with them, and had been taught by them, was third in succession. Even if we doubt some points of this narrative, there are no good grounds for doubting the shorter statement which we owe to Eusebius, that Clement succeeded Anencletus,

<sup>2</sup> Cod. A has it as "Clement's First Epistle," both in the subscription at the end of the epistle itself and in the Index of Books at the end of the New Testament. The Cod. found by Bryennios has it also as "Clement's First Epistle;" so too the Syriac.

<sup>4</sup> In the newly-found chapters is a notable reference to the Holy Trinity: "For as God liveth, and the Lord Jesus Christ liveth, and the Holy Spirit liveth—the faith and hope of the Elect—so assuredly," &c. Until the edition of Bryennios appeared, this was only known in a quotation by Basil, and was the occasion of much perplexity.

whose bishopric of twelve years had begun at the same time as the reign of Domitian.<sup>1</sup> Elsewhere Eusebius says he died in the third year of Trajan's reign. This gives us 93 A.D. to 101 A.D. as the term of Clement's episcopate. Tertullian<sup>2</sup> also directly connects Clement with Peter, saying, in his fervid way, that he was ordained by Peter;—saying it so as to lead some to suppose that Clement was the first overseer of the Roman Church after the Apostles. This was a widespread tradition in the Western Church at a later time; but it probably took its shape from the fact that his is the first prominent name in the post-apostolic ministry.

(2) What, then, are our grounds for connecting this disciple of the Apostles, and overseer of the Roman Church (whether he were the first or not), with the Epistle under consideration?<sup>3</sup>

"Hermas" (about A.D. 140) says Clement's function was to send works to foreign Churches. There is some doubt as to whether this was the Roman Clement; but Dionysius (A.D. 170) says Clement's Epistle was read in the Church of Corinth every Lord's Day. Hegesippus, who was at Corinth on his way to Rome about the year A.D. 140<sup>4</sup> (Pius being Bishop), seems to have read the Epistle at Corinth, and there is no good ground to doubt (although this is not explicitly said by Eusebius) that he speaks of it as Clement's. He also says explicitly that the commotions in the Corinthian Church occurred in Clement's time; and, as Irenæus<sup>5</sup> is equally explicit on this point, we have the strongest ground for connecting him with the Epistle, the subject of which is so clearly those commotions. The words of Irenæus are: "ἐπὶ τούτου τοῦ Κλήμεντος." Clement of Alexandria<sup>6</sup> quotes it repeatedly, calling it at one time Clement's, at another the Epistle of the Romans to the Corinthians. There is doubt as to Origen's use of the Epistle, but none as to his regard for Clement. Eusebius sums up the evidence very fairly by saying that "Clement was universally recognised as the author of the first Epistle written by him to the Corinthians, bearing to be by the Roman Church."<sup>7</sup>

Age of the Epistle.

As the date of Clement's "Episcopate" (we may use this word without attempting to fix its exact meaning) is a matter of controversy, we cannot decide the date of the Epistle off-hand, by reference to the time already fixed for his presidency of the Church of Rome. But from the Epistle itself we learn that its despatch had been delayed by reason of certain sudden and successive calamities which fell upon the writers (c. 1). It appears that this was not the persecution in which the Apostles

Peter and Paul met their end, for that end is elsewhere spoken of as a matter of somewhat remote history (c. 5). It is not possible, therefore, to suppose that the Epistle dates from the time of Nero; and yet it appears as if the generation of the writers had witnessed the departure of the Apostles. Their words are: "But passing by all ancient examples, let us come to the combatants nearest our own time. Let us take the illustrious examples of our own generation" (c. 5, 1). And then comes an account of Peter and Paul. We may suppose, therefore, that it was written within some twenty or thirty years of the Apostles' time. This reference is confirmed by another passage, which tells us that some of those bishops who had been appointed by the Apostles, or other notable men, with the consent of the Church, were dead, while others were still alive. In the newly discovered c. 63, it is said that the messengers are "men who have lived blamelessly among us from youth to old age" (c. 44, 2, 3).

In addition to those indications which its express statements give, we must note one or two furnished by its silence. It is silent as to Gnostic errors,<sup>1</sup> and must, therefore, have been written before the beginning of the second century,—a date at which we know that Gnostic teachers came to Rome. It is silent as to any persecutions of more than a local character, and therefore must have been written before the widespread suffering of Trajan's time (A.D. 115). It is silent as to the controversy regarding the relations of bishop and presbyter. From these indications,<sup>2</sup> positive and negative, we may conclude that its date cannot be earlier than 80, nor later than 100, of our era.

Now Hegesippus tells us that it was written in the time of Domitian. If we refer to his reign the calamities spoken of, we get for our date A.D. 93, or a year not long after.<sup>3</sup> It is by no means improbable that Clement, Bishop of Rome and writer of this Epistle, is the same as Clement nephew of Vespasian, and consul of the city, who was slain in the year 96 A.D. This is at least a much more likely identification than that which makes the Clement of the Epistle the person praised by Paul in Phil. iv. 3. But, be it as it may, the date and authorship may be regarded as settled in favour of the Roman Clement, and the last decade of the century. The earlier date about 69 A.D. does not appear to be at all well supported, even on the showing of its advocates; and it does not seem possible for them to meet the objections already adduced.

<sup>1</sup> The word γνῶσις is repeatedly used without the technical meaning so common in the second century. Compare c. 36, 2; c. 40, 1; c. 41, 4; c. 48, 5. The last of these passages is not very clear, but the others may rule its rendering: see 1 Cor. xii. 8 for similar use of the word.

There can be no doubt that in respect of Scripture incidents, so far as he refers to them, and in respect of Christian doctrine and morality, Clement is entirely in accord with the New Testament. Nor can there be any doubt of his knowing the writings of St Paul. "Take up," he says, "the Epistle of the blessed Paul, the Apostle. What first of all did he write to you in the beginning of the Gospel? Of a truth he spiritually enjoined you concerning himself, and Cephas and Apollos, because that then also ye had formed partialities," &c. (c. 47). Very many passages may be adduced, in which his words seem echoes of expressions in the other New Testament Epistles, as 1 Peter, Timothy, and Titus. The resemblance to the Epistle to the Hebrews is so marked as to have led to the theory that Clement wrote it as well as this Epistle. To these general statements we may add that in appealing to words of Jesus he uses expressions closely corresponding with those in our Gospels.

But these general remarks bring us to the very centre of the battlefield. Does Clement quote our canonical Gospels? or do his words seem to come from some different though kindred source? Admitting, as it is only fair to do, that his words give by no means continuous verbal coincidence with the passages in the Gospels which they resemble, we have to inquire whether the divergence is inconsistent with the theory of quotation. And this again compels us to take up a prior question—viz., how did men quote in those days, and, more especially, how did Clement himself quote? Without entering fully on the subject of the mode of quotations, we may simply say that when men had to consult rolls, and not books, they were not likely to refer to their authority in every instance. As might be expected, therefore, we find that quotations are most accurate when they are long—the writers in such cases thinking it worth while to take down and copy what they wished to quote. But even in such cases we do not find, and we have no right to expect, such severely accurate quotations as are required in modern controversy. The resemblance which is required before we can establish a quotation is therefore a matter of degree; and opinions held by modern critics as to the exact degree on which we have a right to insist, vary with their preconceptions. It seems to me, however, that in the case of Clement we have no need to fall back upon general considerations. He quotes the Old Testament largely; and, as we have the Septuagint in our hands, we can see how he uses it. At a very early stage in the Epistle, he quotes Deut. xxxii. 15, when he says, "ἐπετελέσθη τὸ γεγραμμένον," and yet, after this solemn appeal, we find that he has taken very considerable liberties with his original. In other cases he throws a number of passages together, and often so changes them all as to lead to a doubt from how many he drew the materials so fused. Out of fifty-seven quotations from the Old Testament, only seventeen are exact; and some of the others are so widely variant as to make it doubtful whether even a treacherous memory could be the cause of the divergence.<sup>1</sup>

The following will show how Clement deals with the original in slightly divergent quotation, and will also illustrate his citations of a less accurate character:—

Clement, c. 52, 2.—Φησὶν γὰρ ὁ ἐκλεκτὸς Δαβὶδ· Ἐξομολογήσομαι τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ ἀρέσει αὐτῷ ὑπὲρ μόσχον νέον κέρατα ἐκφέροντα καὶ ὀπλὰς· ἰδέτωσαν πτωχοὶ καὶ εὐφρανθήτωσαν. Καὶ πάλιν λέγει· Θύσον τῷ θεῷ θυσίαν αἰνέσεως, καὶ ἀπόδος τῷ ὑψίστῳ τὰς εὐχὰς σου· καὶ ἐπικάλεσαί με ἐν ἡμέρᾳ θλίψεώς σου, καὶ ἐξελοῦμαί σε, καὶ δοξάσεις με· θυσία γὰρ τῷ Θεῷ πνεῦμα συντετριμμένον.

Ps. lxxix. 31.—Αἰνέσω τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ μου μετ' ᾧδῆς, μεγαλυνῶ αὐτὸν ἐν αἰνέσει. Καὶ ἀρέσει τῷ Θεῷ ὑπὲρ μόσχον νέον κέρατα ἐκφέροντα καὶ ὀπλὰς. Ἰδέτωσαν πτωχοὶ καὶ εὐφρανθήτωσαν.

Ps. l. 14, quoted exactly; and Ps. li. 17 joined to it.

The following is of a very different character. It is startling in its extraordinary combination, if combination it be:—

Clement, c. 29, 4.—Καὶ ἐν ἐτέρῳ τόπῳ λέγει· Ἰδοὺ Κύριος λαμβάνει ἑαυτῷ ἔθνος ἐκ μέσου ἐθνῶν, ὥσπερ λαμβάνει ἄνθρωπος τὴν ἀπαρχὴν αὐτοῦ τῆς ἁλῶ· καὶ ἐξελεύσεται ἐκ τοῦ ἔθνους ἐκείνου ἅγια ἁγίων.

There is no such passage, but it may be supposed to be a blending of—

Num. xviii. 27.—Καὶ λογισθήσεται ὑμῖν τὰ ἀφαιρέματα ὑμῶν ὡς σίτος ἀπὸ ἁλῶ, καὶ ἀφαίρεμα ἀπὸ ληνοῦ.

Deut. iv. 34.—Εἰ ἐπείρασεν ὁ Θεὸς εἰσελθὼν λαβεῖν ἑαυτῷ ἔθνος ἐκ μέσου ἔθνους ἐν πειρασμῷ, καὶ ἐν σημείοις, καὶ ἐν τέρασι, κ.τ.λ.

2 Chron. xxxi. 14.—Καὶ Κορὴ ὁ τοῦ Ἰεμνὰ ὁ Λευίτης ὁ πυλωρὸς κατὰ ἀνατολὰς ἐπὶ τῶν δομάτων, δοῦναι τὰς ἀπαρχὰς Κυρίου, καὶ τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, κ.τ.λ.

The following may be taken as a specimen of inaccurate quotation from memory:—

Clement, c. 3. 1, τὸ γεγραμμένον.—Ἐφαγεν καὶ ἔπειν, καὶ ἐπλατύνθη καὶ ἐπαχύνθη καὶ ἀπελάτισεν ὁ ἡγαπημένος.

<sup>1</sup> I had prepared a full list of Clement's quotations from the Old Testament, with the view of sustaining the position here taken up, but ere these sheets were printed I found it had been already done by Dr Sanday—'Gospels in the Second Cent.', p. 26.

Deut. xxxii. 15.—Καὶ ἔφαγεν Ἰακώβ καὶ ἐνεπλήσθη, καὶ ἀπελάτισεν ὁ ἡγαπημένος, ἐλιπάνθη, ἐπαχύνθη, ἐπλατύνθη.

The following is a case of expansion of his original. Some suppose his authority to have been an apocryphal or interpolated Ezekiel; but of the existence of such a book there is great doubt. See Lightfoot's "Note."

Clement, c. 8, 2.—Ζῶ γὰρ ἐγὼ, λέγει Κύριος, οὐ βούλομαι τὸν θάνατον τοῦ ἁμαρτωλοῦ, ὡς τὴν μετάνοιαν· προστιθεὶς καὶ γνώμην ἀγαθὴν· Μετανοήσατε, οἶκος Ἰσραήλ, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνομίας ὑμῶν· εἶπον τοῖς υἱοῖς τοῦ λαοῦ μου· Ἐὰν ᾧσιν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ὑμῶν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ἐὰν ᾧσιν πυρρότεροι κόκκον καὶ μελανώτεροι σάκκου, καὶ ἐπιστραφῇτε πρὸς με ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας καὶ εἴπητε· Πάτερ, ἐπακούσομαι ὑμῶν ὡς λαοῦ ἀγίου.

Ezek. xxxiii. 11.—Ζῶ ἐγὼ, τάδε λέγει Κύριος, οὐ βούλομαι τὸν θάνατον τοῦ ἀσεβοῦς ὡς ἀποστρέψαι τὸν ἀσεβῆ ἀπὸ τῆς ὁδοῦ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ζῆν αὐτόν.

Compare Ps. ciii. 10; Jer. iii. 19; Is. i. 18; Ezek. xviii. 30.

This, then, was Clement's way of quoting the Old Testament. He alters, he fuses; sometimes he quotes correctly; sometimes we are inclined to suppose an apocryphal book to have been in his mind.

Let us now turn to

Clement's relation to New Testament Passages.

The references under John's Gospel, p. 170, and notes, contain enough to show his mode of quotation of the words of Jesus.

The first one (on page 104) from c. 13 is perplexing. If it is not from one of the canonical Gospels, we know not whence it was taken. To assume (1) that it is necessarily from some other written source, and (2) that the source was the "Gospel of the Hebrews," or the "Preaching of Peter," or the "Gospel of the Nazarenes," is to invent machinery for disposing of the difficulty. And against the assumption of some well-known written source, other than our Gospels ('Sup. Rel.'), is the fact that the same part of the Sermon on the Mount is quoted by Polycarp with equal variations from our Gospels,<sup>1</sup> but not the same variations as here. It is not a more remarkable change of the original than those we have quoted from the Old Testament.

On the whole, we conclude with Lightfoot that, "as Clement's quotations are often very loose, we need not go beyond the canonical Gospels for the source of this passage."

The extract from c. 46 (p. 105) seems to be a quotation from memory. The passages combined are just such as would naturally be combined in memory, although they are far apart in the Gospels. Compare Mat. xxvi. 24, xviii. 6; Mark ix. 42; Luke xvii. 1, 2. Tertullian tells us that Marcion's Gospel contained in the beginning of chap. xvii. of our St Luke the interpolation, "Expedisse ei, si natus non fuisset," &c., which may be an echo of this reading of Clement's, or a proof of a widespread traditional rendering.

The words (c. 44), "And our apostles knew through our Lord Jesus Christ that there shall be strife on account of the overseership,"<sup>1</sup> is mainly remarkable because it is the precursor of many similar references in subsequent writers. Justin quotes as a saying of Jesus, "There shall be schisms and heresies."<sup>2</sup> The Clementine Homilies make it more explicit: "There shall be, as the Lord said, false apostles, false prophets, heresies, desires for supremacy."<sup>3</sup> And Hegesippus may refute them, when he says, "From these came the false Christs, false prophets, false apostles, who divided the unity of the Church."<sup>4</sup> Those who refer these passages to some current written Gospel, have to account for the extreme freedom of the variations: and it does not seem possible to do so without adopting the very principle on which they refuse to proceed, when they object to canonical books as the probable source of divergent quotations. (See text, p. 125, and note.)

There is a chapter (c. 24) on the Resurrection, which is full of phrases suggesting the New Testament. It is said that the Lord τὴν ἀπαρχὴν ἐποίησατο τὸν Κύριον Ἰν Χν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστήσας. We have also ἐξῆλθεν ὁ σπείρων (Mat. xiii. 3), and a doctrinal use of the fact that the seed from its death brings forth fruit (1 Cor. xv. 36; John xii. 24). And we have a solemn use of the words, ὁ ἀληθινὸς καὶ μόνος [Θεός], which Keim<sup>5</sup> admits to be an allusion to John.

To cite here, or even to give a classification of the innumerable phrases in Clement which suggest the New Testament, is beyond our limits. The principal passages in full, and references to many more, will be found in the text:<sup>6</sup> but no one can read the Epistle without seeing

that its author's mind is steeped in the thoughts, doctrines, and associations which are preserved to us in Scripture. It is entirely beyond the power of lists and figures to convey an idea of the strength of the witness for the perpetuity of the first characteristics of Christianity, which we find in the outpouring of the heart of this "ep-apostolic" teacher.<sup>1</sup> Only a perusal can give the impression,—but it is one which can never be forgotten. The incarnation of the pre-existent Christ, who had spoken before by the mouth of the Seers; and the blood by which we are saved; and the resurrection of the crucified Christ; and the spirit by which our life should be ruled,—of these truths the mind of Clement is full. He closes what we may term a prose poem in c. 49 with these words: "In love the Lord (ὁ δεσπότης) took us towards Himself; for the love which He had towards us, Jesus Christ our Lord (Κύριος), according to the will of God, gave His blood on our account, and His flesh for our flesh, and His blood for our blood."

Justification by Faith with works,—as the enlightened Christian conscience has without formula set the doctrine clear before itself,—this is the teaching of Clement. We may hear St James and St Paul speak with blended voice, although the tone of James is more distinct, when Clement says (c. 30, 3): "Let us therefore cleave to those to whom grace has been given from God; let us put on like-mindedness with them, being lowly of mind, self-restraining, putting ourselves far apart from all murmuring and evil speaking, being justified by works and not by words." Many of the phrases are Petrine also, so that we see in Clement the disciple of all the chief apostles.<sup>2</sup>

Or we may hear what seems to be Clement's own more personal thought, following perhaps the "blessed Paul" (c. 32, 4): "All the saints of old were glorified and magnified, not through themselves, or their works, or their righteous deeds which they achieved, but through His will. And we therefore, being called by His will in Christ Jesus, are not justified through ourselves, or through our wisdom, or prudence, or piety, or works which we did in purity of heart, but through the faith through which the Almighty God somehow justified all men from all ages: to whom be glory everlasting."

If we would see how Clement's grateful heart made the Personal Saviour the centre of his life, we only need to turn to c. 36. If we would see how he extends the application of Paul's praise of love, in words which remind us of the Lord Himself in John's Gospel, and of Peter as well, we find c. 49 full of meaning for us.<sup>3</sup>

It is quite true that this correspondence between Clement (the same applies to Polycarp) and the canonical writers, to which we here refer, is not one of quotations which can be weighed or counted with mathematical exactness; but it is not for all that to be lightly esteemed. If we had to construct the scheme of Christian Theology from those writers, we should certainly have considerable difficulty, because of the unstudied way in which they write, and also because of the vagueness of their ideas on doctrine. Their aim is mainly ethical. They are exhorting Christians to constancy in the faith; to brotherly kindness; to submission to lawful authority; they are teaching no doctrine save by implication; and theology and criticism find little to claim in their writings. But, on the other hand, they manifest in every page, and almost in every line, the power of a religion based upon the truths of our Gospel. The men have rested their faith upon Jesus Christ as their Saviour; they have done that once for all; and now they are occupied in living up to the requirements of Christianity in daily life. It is not that they have no knowledge of Christian truth as a system,—they founded upon St Paul's Epistles, and therefore must have had a theology,—but they are dealing with Christian life and practical religion. When regarded in this their true light, these Epistles of Clement and Polycarp furnish an argument for the canon, by implying far more than they express. They imply the previous acceptance of the existing documents and doctrines of the New Testament: and the very fact that in the case of those to whom they were writing, as in their own, they constantly assume that the religion of Jesus Christ has been known and believed, is a powerful testimony to the acceptance of the same facts, and the prevalence of the same truth. We may see that Clement knew his readers to be more familiar with the life of Jesus Christ than with the biographies of Old Testament saints; for when he speaks of Abraham or Moses or David, he thinks it necessary to remind them of the general characters of the life, whereas a simple allusion to the facts of the history of Jesus Christ is enough.

If the Tübingen theories as to the origin of Christianity, and to the manufacture of canonical books, were well founded, or even possibly correct, those writings of the "Apostolical Fathers" could not have been what they are. For at the very time when, according to Baur, Christianity was torn with an internal conflict between the factions of Peter and Paul; at the very time when the victorious Pauline party were manufacturing letters and histories in the name and in the supposed interests of the great Apostle of the Gentiles;—at that very time appeared those letters of Clement and Polycarp, showing in every unstudied line the general acceptance of the Gospel narratives, and of the Epistles now found in our New Testament.

SECOND EPISTLE.

A Homily of the second century falsely ascribed to Clement.

When all that we knew of the so-called "Second Epistle" was the fragment found in Cod. A, it was difficult to say anything very certain about it. But now that the whole has been found in Greek and in Syriac, there can be no doubt of the truth of what was (since Grabe) believed by many before, that it is not an Epistle, but a Homily. We read in Justin and Tertullian, and we may perhaps infer from Pliny, that after the reading of the Scriptures in the Christian congregations of the second century, it was usual for the President, or some one deputed by him, to exhort the people: and who has not longed for some specimen of the words which were spoken on such occasions—words that nourished the simple but strong faith of the early Church? What was longed for is now in our hands.<sup>1</sup> Whether the Homilist was a Presbyter, whose ordinary function was to teach, or some one speaking on some exceptional occasion, may be doubtful (see chapters 17 and 19)—is indeed disputed among eminent critics; but that it was an address of the usual character, only so acceptable as to be widely circulated and carefully preserved, we need not doubt at all.

Was it, then, the work of Clement? We can scarcely suppose that Clement, when speaking for himself, would have spoken as one who was accustomed to be exhorted by the Presbyters, yet this writer does so speak (c. 17). This alone makes us conclude against the theory that the Homily was Clement's. Other reasons have been advanced to the same effect, but they are of less moment. The theology of the Homily is said to be of later date than that of Clement's genuine Epistle; and the view of the New Testament is regarded as more advanced. But arguments on this basis are precarious; and they can be met by assertions on the other side, to the effect that we cannot fairly compare the theology of a sermon with that of a letter, and that the vagueness of the references to the New Testament Epistles, and the apparent absence of a Bishop in the Church, indicate an even earlier date than Clement's day.

All that we can say for certain is, that the Homily does not seem to be Clement's,<sup>2</sup> but is of old date, and was so highly valued as to be bound up with the Epistle of Clement, though how it came to be ascribed to him as its author we can only conjecture. External evidence of its antiquity is not of much assistance to us. Eusebius<sup>1</sup> is the first to mention it: and his uncomplimentary remark is that, though it is ascribed to Clement, he has no assurance of its having been used in old times, and that it is by no means to be put on a level with the first Epistle. In the fifth century the pseudo-Justin calls it "Clement's to the Corinthians." The allusions in the sixth century are so uncertain as to make nothing clear, save the fact that it was not at that time universally accepted as Clement's.

But if not Clement's, whose was it? That we cannot say. Some indeed find in its references to Scripture the same point of view as in Barnabas; others think it is so like Hermas, as to be by the same author; others would persuade us that it is the work of Clement of Alexandria.<sup>2</sup> It is easy to conjecture, but apparently impossible to ascertain.

But if by an unknown author, where did he speak it? In Rome, in Corinth, or where? From its earliest known history, one is inclined to suppose that it was addressed (as Clement's letter was) to the Corinthian Church; and the allusions to the games go to favour the same conclusion. The Homilist not only speaks with evidently full knowledge of the proceedings in the contests, but his language implies that he was near the spot at which the "crowds land to take part in the games."<sup>3</sup> That he was a Gentile appears from his allusions to the past history of his "people" and his "church"—c. 1, 6; c. 2, 1, 3. We have probability on our side, when we say that it was spoken in Corinth, and therefore came eventually to be put alongside of Clement's Epistle to the church in that place.

What is the date of the Homily? In this as in other questions affecting the date of writings of the second century, we have to see what form of Gnosticism seems to have been in the author's view. Applying this test, we cannot fail to observe that he is a vigorous assailant of that phase of Gnosticism which denied the resurrection of the body,—or rather the resurrection of the flesh (τῆς σαρκός). The earliest Gnosticism took that form; the fundamental dogma of all Gnosticism, the sinfulness of matter, naturally produced it; we see it even in the Pauline Epistles; and we are led towards the conclusion, that the preacher spoke at no later date than the beginning of the second century. To the same effect is the consideration that he uses language which he would probably have avoided, had the speculations of Valentinus and Marcion been known to him. For these reasons, it is natural to fix some time between A.D. 120 and A.D. 140 as the date. But, on the other hand, we must remember that this was really a popular sermon, not a philosophical treatise, nor even a written Epistle; and that its author had evidently in view the practical end of warning men not to indulge in lusts which would defile the body that is destined to rise again. The greatness of the present life, because in it the Christian works out the great salvation which Christ purchased for him—that is the preacher's theme, as against those who held the Gnostic tenets of the incurable sinfulness of matter, and the immortality of mind alone. We may well hesitate to conclude that the preacher knew no subtler form of Gnosticism than that which he vigorously denounces. It was still specially needful, as before, in Corinth, to urge men to discipline the body, and to live according to the purity of the Gospel (see c. 4, 6; 7, 15); and we can easily believe that this pressing need filled the earnest teacher's mind, so that he would not dwell on the intricacies of speculations whose evil results were more indirect or more remote, even though such speculations might be known to him.

In short, although there is no reason to fix a date later than A.D. 120-140, there is not much in the views taken of Gnosticism to compel us to come to that, or any other very definite conclusion. The Homily might have been spoken a generation later, or even later still. The mode of quoting Scripture furnishes, in point of fact, the only valid argument for its being a work of the second century—and before the last years of that century. No representative of the Catholic Church in the end of the century would have stood in the same perplexing relation to the "Scriptures" and the "Gospel" and the "words of the Lord" as this preacher, who quoted indiscriminately the Old Testament and the New Testament and the Apocryphal books, the canonical Gospels and the lost Gospel of the Egyptians.

When we look at one side, the testimony to our Scriptures is explicit and ample. The author (c. 2) quotes Mat. ix. 13 as γραφὴ,—in this reminding us of Barnabas; and he uses the same word for the Old Testament (c. 6, 14). Words introduced (c. 8) with "Thus saith the Lord in the Gospel" seem to be a blending of Luke xvi. 10 with Mat. xxv. 21. "Thus saith the Lord" is his most usual formula for the New Testament (cc. 3, 4; 6, 9); and he uses it for the Old Testament also (cc. 13, 15). In one place (c. 14) he alludes in general terms to the Old and New Testament as τὰ βιβλία καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι, saying that they are not the Church, because the Church is spiritual. The reading is doubtful, but it is to this effect.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hilgenfeld inserts in c. 10 a passage bearing on the canon, in which the Old Testament and New Testament and the Sibyl are enumerated as Scriptures: αἱ γραφαὶ προφητῶν τε καὶ ἀποστόλων, ἔτι τε καὶ τῆς σιβάλλης. His authority is found in some extracts bearing the name of John of Damascus (eighth century). But even this re-

Nor is this all. In one notable passage, after quoting the Old Testament as "Thus saith the Lord," he goes on to cite the words of Jesus Christ from the New Testament as "God saith" (c. 13). In another place he describes the reading of the Scriptures as hearing the God of Truth: indeed his words are even stronger, and must be quoted,—“Wherefore, brethren and sisters, after the God of Truth, I now read<sup>1</sup> you an exhortation to attend to the things which have been written, so that you may both save yourselves and him who readeth among you” (c. 19). In c. 13 he refers to λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ, so as to show that he means either the very words or the substance of the Christian writings which Christians made known to the Gentiles. In this he may be regarded as illustrating the much-disputed words of Papias that Matthew wrote the λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ (Eus. H. E. III. 39). If there be any ambiguity in the Homilist's words—if we cannot say without hesitation that he refers to the ‘Evangelical Record’ (Lightfoot), rather than to its substance—we may undoubtedly say that there is the same ambiguity as to substance and record in Rom. iii. 2, Heb. v. 12; and that, at all events, there is not good ground for believing (with many modern critics) that λόγια in the case of Papias meant a collection of Christ's sayings, as distinct from an account of His works.

So far all seems clear. But there is another side. The author (c. 4) quotes in some places as “The Lord said” words which we do not find in our Gospels (chaps. 4 and 5); and as he reports a dialogue between our Lord and some one which Clement of Alexandria ascribes to the “Gospel according to the Egyptians,” it has been supposed that some of his other passages are taken from the same source. In another passage he refers to the prophetic word for a solemnly cited quotation, which seems to come from some Old Testament apocryphal book. The same passage with variations is quoted as γραφὴ in the Epistle of Clement (c. 23). In other cases he seems to re-echo the books of Tobit and Ecclesiasticus. There is no evidence that he knew the writings of John: the Pauline Epistles to the Ephesians and to Timothy are apparently quoted or echoed, but there is not any avowed founding upon New Testament Epistles as authorities.

On the whole, we conclude with some perplexity that the Homily was spoken at a period when a distinction between canonical and apocryphal writings was not sharply drawn as regards the New Testament; that the time for doctrinal inferences from the Pauline Epistles had not yet come; and that the use made of the Old Testament Apocrypha cent authority is doubtful, and the origin of the extracts remains obscure. Some ascribe them to other pseudo-Clementine writings. Recent experience does not dispose us to deny the possibility of some gap in even our present form of the MS. But see Bryennios, Proleg. ρξα', and Hilg. Pat. Apost., p. 85.

and of the "Egyptian" Gospel, as well as the general cast of thought, warrant us in believing that, by education or by predilection, the unknown preacher was in some special way connected with the Christian Church in Alexandria.

The darkness in which the date, place, and authorship are involved, makes this ancient sermon more curious than valuable to the inquirer into Canonicity.

OTHER EPISTLES ASCRIBED TO CLEMENT.

Two Epistles on Virginity were published by Wetstein from the Syriac (in which alone they exist) as an Appendix to his Greek Testament, 1752. They quote from the New Testament as found in the Syrian Canon : and they are themselves bound up with 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, and Jude, in an Appendix to the Syriac New Testament. They seem to have been known to Epiphanius and Jerome, and were probably written originally in Greek by some one connected with the Eastern Church. Westcott assigns them to the middle of the second century. All the books of the Peshito New Testament are quoted (save Mark and Philemon, probably omitted by accident)—see Westcott, Canon, p. 167 ; Lightfoot, Corinthians, p. 18. These two Epistles were regarded by the Syrian Church as genuine works of Clement.

Epistle to James the Lord's Brother, found prefixed to the Clementine Homilies.<sup>1</sup> It claims to give a narrative of Clement's appointment by Peter to be Bishop of Rome ; and to furnish also the Apostle's injunctions as to Church government. It is found in an enlarged form among the forged Papal Decretals. It may also date in its Greek form from the second century ; and its Latin version (Rufinus) is of the fourth.

A Second Epistle to James. It is a forgery of much later date—probably of the fifth century. It refers to ritualistic minutiae, church furniture, and such like. It is mentioned here because the Western Church, which lost all traces of the genuine Epistles of Clement, and of the venerable Homily, seems to have regarded the two Epistles to James as the genuine Epistles of Clement.

III.—HERMAS.

This book bears but slightly upon our inquiry regarding the canon. It is the work of the Bunyan of the Church of the second century. It is a succession of visions and mystic teachings, called "The Shepherd," because the author describes the angel who instructed him as "a man of glorious aspect, dressed like a shepherd, with a white skin, a wallet on his shoulders, and a staff in his hand."<sup>1</sup> It is full of practical teaching, and contains not a few passages which may be styled beautiful; but it is not an interesting book. It is a distinctively Christian, perhaps Judæo-Christian, book, and is evidently written for those who, knowing the doctrines of the Gospel, needed to have its pure moral requirements impressed on them. One can believe that it served somewhat of the same purpose in its day as the miracle-plays and the sacred allegories of the Reformation period did afterwards, or as the Ober-Ammergau festival does in our own day. But for those who seek unequivocal traces, not of Christianity only, but of the use of our canonical books, or of other Christian books regarded as Scripture, there is little in the Shepherd of Hermas. Through its theology one may come to certain conclusions, but it is not our present purpose to follow that path. It shows us a clear faith in the living God and in the suffering and exalted Saviour, and we might show from it the continuity of Christian doctrine. There are difficulties, however, even in the theology. Whether Hermas clearly distinguished between Christ and the Holy Ghost (Sim. IX. 1), or what he meant in every case by the words "Son of God" as descriptive of Christ, we cannot here inquire.<sup>2</sup> It is enough for us to say that there is only one quotation from the New Testament that can be identified (Vis. II. 2; Mat. x. 33), and one distinct allusion (Vis. II. 3) to an apocryphal book, when he says that Heldad and Modad prophesied to the people in the wilderness.<sup>3</sup>

There are many passages which may fairly be taken as "echoes" of words and thoughts of the New Testament. Especially are we reminded of James, and of Peter, and of the Apocalypse, though the works of Paul are also frequently suggested.

The "Shepherd" was highly thought of in the early Church, both in east and west. There seems no good reason to doubt the statement<sup>1</sup> that it was written by Hermas while its author's brother was Bishop of Rome, so that it dates from about A.D. 142. That it belongs to the ep-apostolic age in any closer way is most improbable.<sup>2</sup> But there is no doubt that if we have given the right date it attained to great popularity very soon, for Irenæus seems to quote it (though he does not name it) with marked approval,—καλῶς οὖν εἶπεν ἡ γραφή. Clement of Alexandria speaks of it as divinely spoken, and by revelation: and Origen says, "I think it divinely inspired." Tertullian, on the other hand (after he became a Montanist), not only denounced it as the book that "loves adulterers," but says that even the synods of the orthodox counted it spurious. His objection was that it allowed a fallen Christian to be restored. It cannot have been an old book in his time. (See Westcott, Canon, p. 179, for proofs of its being of the age when Montanism began.) Eusebius sets it among the disputed or the spurious books. (See H. E. III. 3, III. 25, and V. 8.)

The recent discovery of a part of Hermas in the Sinaitic codex has so far furnished scholars with Hermas in Greek; from which, and from the Leipsic codex, and the various Latin versions, Hilgenfeld (1866) and Gebhardt and Harnack (1877) have set themselves to construct the Greek in full.<sup>3</sup> There is also an Æthiopic version (published 1860), with a modern Latin rendering, of which use has been made; and there are numerous quotations in Greek critics, especially Clem. Alex., pseudo-Athanasius, and Antiochus, a monk of the seventh century. But the origin of the Greek of Hermas is still a problem only partially solved.

<sup>1</sup> Muratorian Canon. Hilgenfeld suggests that one so nearly connected with the superintendents of the Church would not have rated them so soundly as ignorant and emulous of each other (see Vis. III. 9, &c.; Hilgenf., Pat. Apost., Proleg. Hermas, p. 15). It may also be doubted whether the author does not seem to be an uneducated man, of hazy theology and imperfect powers of expression. But still the statement of the Muratorian fragment may be adhered to.

<sup>2</sup> It is hopeless to connect it with the Hermas of Rom. xvi. 14, although Origen thinks it possible. It speaks of the death of the Apostles as past; and it speaks of Christians as tried by law, and judicially condemned to the wild beasts. Judicial proceedings were subsequent to Trajan's rescript, and possibly we may find in this way that its earliest date is Hadrian's reign (beginning A.D. 138). We thus confirm the Muratorian date.

<sup>3</sup> See Hilgenfeld, Proleg., p. 1, and Donaldson, Apost. Fathers, p. 383, &c., for full accounts of the forgery of a Greek version of part of the book by Simonides, and the suspicions entertained of his work, and even of Tischendorf's. This last reference Westcott (Canon, p. 190) does not meet. (See Reuss, Gesch., s. 275.) Geb. and Har. (Hermas, Proleg., 1877) point out the difficulties in the way of supposing the Greek of Hermas (as we have it) to be a translation from the Latin. If Hermas wrote in Greek, then the Greek and the Latin version of it have been lost; if he wrote in Latin, the original Latin and the first Greek of it have been lost: and to add to the perplexity, the Greek which we have is not a rendering of either or both of the Latin versions which we have (the very corrupt common Latin, and the Palatine MS, which differs from the common one).

IV.—IGNATIUS.

THERE is great difficulty in making any use of the Ignatian testimony in the canonical books, because it is very uncertain how much Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, actually wrote of what bears his name. If we could assume that the early traditions of his death, in the time of Trajan, A.D. 115, are true, his testimony would be specially valuable. He was, in that case, not only the contemporary of the post-apostolic Fathers, but was probably alive during, or soon after, Christ's life on earth.<sup>1</sup>

But the fifteen epistles ascribed to him have been, and still are, the subject of infinite debate. Eight of them<sup>2</sup> are now universally admitted to be spurious, as they are full of anachronisms, and of divergence from the quotations during the first five centuries, and were not only unknown to Eusebius, but, so far as can be seen, to all other Greek writers up to the sixth century. But even when those are removed from the field, disputes arise as to the seven which remain. There are seven enumerated by Eusebius,<sup>3</sup> and the notes and references which he gives correspond with seven which are preserved in Greek, Latin, and Armenian. But, first of all, we have two Greek recensions of them—a longer and a shorter—one of which must, of course, be spurious. The form in which they were known to exist when Calvin and others rightly denounced them as spurious was what is now usually called the longer recension. Voss published six of the shorter form in Greek (1646), <sup>1</sup> A tradition of uncertain origin describes him as the child whom Jesus took in His arms (Mat. xviii. 3). But this seems to have arisen from mistaking Θεοφόρος, the title which he gives himself, with Θεόφορος (carried by God). In the Martyr. Ign. Colb., c. 2, it is said to mean ὁ Χριστὸν ἔχων ἐν στέφει.

<sup>2</sup> One to the Virgin Mary; two to the Apostle John (these are only in Latin); one to Mary of Cassobolae; one each to Tarsians, Antiochians, Hero of Antioch, Philippians. There are also one or two letters to Ignatius in the full pseudo-Ignatian collection.

<sup>3</sup> The seven are addressed to Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, Romans, Philadelphians, Smyrναeans, Polycarp. Eusebius (H. E. III. 36) tells us about them, saying that Ignatius wrote the first-named three from Smyrna, where Polycarp was; and not only gives several references which are found in the letters we have, but quotes a long passage in which Ignatius entreats the Romans not to prevent him from winning the crown of martyrdom. He adds similarly that the others were written from Smyrna.

and the seventh (to the Romans) was published afterwards by Ruinart in 1689. All agree that the discovery of the shorter recension (in Latin, by Usher, 1644; and in Greek, by Voss, 1646) gives a final blow to claims to genuineness by the longer epistles. But while all agree that the shorter letters—called by Lightfoot the Vossian<sup>1</sup>—are better than the longer, there remains the question whether the smaller themselves are genuine. Lardner says of it, “Whatever positiveness some may have shown on either side, I must own I have found it a very difficult question.” At the same time, critics agreed with him that it is “probable that they are in the main the genuine epistles of Ignatius.”

So stood the controversy when Dr Cureton found among the treasures brought from Nitria, and published (in 1845), “The Ancient Syriac version of the Epistles of St Ignatius to St Polycarp, the Ephesians, and the Romans,” and argued that those three are all the extant genuine works of Ignatius. In this Syriac recension not only is the number of epistles smaller, but each epistle itself is shorter, more rugged, and more abrupt. The upholders of the “Curetonian Epistles” think the Greek form an expansion and corruption of the lost Greek originals of those Syriac letters. Its opponents think the Syriac a capricious or a devotional abridgment of the Greek.

In 1849 Petermann published an Armenian version of the Ignatian Epistles, corresponding, so far as the three letters go, with the Syriac, but containing all the seven Vossian epistles. It contains thirteen in all—that is to say, six in addition to the Vossian. He argues that this Armenian version was made from a Syriac version in the fifth century. If this be true, then both a Greek and a Syriac version of more than the seven epistles must have existed at a very early date.

Such, and so complicated, is the question of the Ignatian letters. The latest theory, to which many critics<sup>2</sup> have declared their adherence, is that the seven letters which we now have are those that were known and accurately described by Eusebius, that they were translated into Syriac soon after his time, and that the Curetonian epistles are merely an extract from them. It is further supposed that they were interpolated by the pseudo-Ignatius about the period A.D. 360-380, and that this is the origin of the longer recension.

<sup>1</sup> Strictly speaking, as stated in the text, Voss had only the Greek of six; the seventh (Romans) was published by Ruinart. This epistle, probably because addressed to a distant European church, is not found in the oldest MSS alongside of the other six, which seem to have been collected in Asia at an early date. Polycarp tells the Philippian, c. 13, that he has collected and sends all the Ignatian letters he can find, and that they are full of faith and patience and all Christian edification. The Roman one was not at hand—there was not time for it to have come back; and we owe its preservation to its being imbedded in a martyrology.

<sup>2</sup> Zahn claims that he has won for his views the approval of Hilgenfeld, Lipsius, Overbeck, Delitzsch, and others. See Pat. Apost. op. (Gebhardt, Harnack, and Zahn), vol. ii. p. 6. He has certainly found a powerful ally in Lightfoot.

Notwithstanding the apparent agreement of critics in thinking at least the Curetonian letters genuine (because the quotations of the second and third centuries are found in them), and the Vossian epistles not later than the middle of the second century, mainly because of the writer's absolute silence on the controversies which distracted the Church at a later date, we venture still to think that all the difficulties are by no means solved.

The story on which the epistles rested, though not beyond doubt,<sup>1</sup> is probably true. It seems to be a fact that Ignatius professed himself to be a Christian while Trajan was in Antioch (A.D. 116<sup>2</sup>), and was sent to Rome to the wild beasts. It is probably true that Ignatius wrote various letters while upon this journey,—the earliest testimony (Polycarp, Theophilus, Irenæus, Origen, Lucian, Eusebius) is quite enough to establish that fact; but the point upon which we are not sure is the survival of those letters to our day in such a form that they can be used as evidence of anything else. Polycarp in his epistle refers to the letters; Irenæus and Origen quote them explicitly; but when we use any passage, we are in doubt whether it has not been manipulated. It is in the matter of quotation from Scripture that the longer forms differ most from each other. The Curetonian text contains no quotation from the Old Testament, and very few from the New. The Vossian contains a number of quotations, the longer Greek form very many. Which is the genuine form of these letters? I cannot help thinking that all of them suggest suspicions; that even in the shortest form they contain anachronisms and high prelatical views foreign to the spirit of the New Testament, and characteristic of a system of Church government which there had not been time to develop since the last Epistles of St Paul were written. We read in Polycarp of presbyters and deacons only; Clement speaks of bishops or overseers and deacons: but we are in another atmosphere when we read those "Letters of Ignatius," who was not later than they. Take, for example, the letter to Polycarp, as it is even in the Syriac version. It seems to me so unnatural a letter to be addressed to the great saint and bishop of Smyrna, that it would need very cogent external evidence for its genuineness before being accepted. Speaking of a man who can remain unmarried, he says (c. 5): "If he boasts, he is undone; if he become known apart from the bishop,<sup>1</sup> he has destroyed himself." After a few more words, he says, addressing not the bishop but the Church (c. 6): "Look ye to the bishop, that God also may look upon you. May I be instead of the souls of those who are subject to the bishops, presbyters, deacons; and may it be granted to me to have my lot with them in God." The whole tone of this letter is unlike Paul's in addressing his young friends Timothy and Titus; and it seems inconceivable that Ignatius could have spoken so much de haut en bas in addressing Polycarp. The Epistle to the Ephesians is full of similar expressions: they are to "receive the bishop as Him that sent him" (c. 6).<sup>2</sup> The Epistle to the Romans is not in the same tone.

<sup>1</sup> The authorities before Eusebius for the Ignatian authorship of the letters are four in number. Polycarp (Phil. c. 13, 9, i. 1) refers to Ignatius's letter to the Philippians. Irenæus (B. V. 28, 3) refers to Ign. ad Rom. c. 4, 2, in this way: ὡς εἶπé, τις τῶν ἡμετέρων διὰ τὴν πρὸς Θεὸν μαρτυρίαν κατακριθεὶς πρὸς θηρία. Origen (Prolog. to Canticles) cites Ign. ad Rom. c. 7, 2: Denique memini aliquem sanctorum dixisse, Ignatium nomine, de Christo. And in his sixth Hom. in Luc. he says: Καλῶς ἐν μιᾷ τῶν μάρτυρός τινος ἐπιστολῶν γέγραπται—τὸν Ἰγνάτιον λέγω, τὸν μετὰ τὸν μακάριον Πέτρον τῆς Ἀντιوخείας δεύτερον ἐπίσκοπον τὸν ἐν τῷ διωγμῷ ἐν Ῥώμῃ θηρίοις μαχρησάμενον. When Eusebius takes up the subject, he (H. E. III. 36) refers to the testimonies of Polycarp and Irenæus. He refers to the tradition which speaks of Ignatius as sent from Syria to Rome, to be the prey of wild beasts, with his λόγος δ' ἔχει—a phrase that seems, in his usage, to distinguish tradition from clearly historical authority. In his Chronicle (after II. 23 Abr.), Eusebius mentions Ignatius as martyr and second bishop of Antioch; and again he seems to speak of him as second bishop of Antioch. But the lists of bishops are confused; and Eusebius seems, in his Chronicle, to depend on Julius Africanus (A.D. 222), who makes Euodius the first bishop of Antioch, and Ignatius the second, without counting Peter. Origen's notice, therefore, contradicts this; and Polycarp and Irenæus are too vague to be much depended upon for the details of the Ignatian story. Founding on the above facts, Harnack (Die Zeit des Ignatius, 1878) concludes that the tradition of Ignatius suffering martyrdom under Trajan is a bare possibility, without certainty, without even special probability (p. 71). The ingenious argument of Harnack, however, fails to account for the references in Polycarp, Irenæus, and Origen. They were founded on some fuller narratives—not on mere chronicles; and though we have not the details known to them, we must be prepared to allow for their existence.

<sup>2</sup> Wieseler (Christenverfolgungen der Cäsaren, s. 126) still maintains that A.D. 107 is the date. But he founds on Eus. Chron., which Eusebius himself does not adhere to.

It is possible that one's opinions on the general subject of the origin of Episcopacy may warp his critical judgment. I can only say that I have striven to divest myself of prejudice, and that after I have made every effort at being dispassionate, those letters still seem to me to have been either written or interpolated by one who was eager to extend an episcopal system already in existence, and that they therefore represent a much later date than the first or second decade of the second century.<sup>3</sup> The strongest argument on the other side is, that the tremulous eagerness of the writer to confirm the authority of the bishop indicates consciousness that he was far ahead of his readers in his hierarchical views. But this does not prevail to establish an early date, and is quite consistent with a late one.

<sup>2</sup> In Smyrn. c. 8, is the first use of the phrase ἡ καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία, which is said to be "wherever Christ Jesus is." See Eus. H. E. IV. 7; Martyr. Pol. 8, &c.

V.—POLYCARP.

An inquiry into the testimony of Polycarp need not range over a wide field. Many works have been ascribed to him, but there is not now any controversy regarding any of them save his letter to the Philippians. There is also a venerable monument of antiquity of which Eusebius has embodied a large portion in his narrative, and which is likewise found by itself under the title of the ‘Martyrdom of Polycarp.’ There can be no doubt of its great age, and of its containing some touching details of the aged martyr’s fidelity to his faith. But it is burdened with some miracles useless save for purposes of display; its anxiety about the date indicates a recent martyrologist; and it professes to relate scenes in the Roman theatre which a Christian can with difficulty be supposed to have seen.<sup>1</sup> If we take it as it stands, it must be regarded as the compilation of some pious and credulous chronicler of an age later than the Martyr. But recent investigation tends to separate the original document from the accretions,<sup>2</sup> and to give fair grounds for accepting it as of the age of Polycarp.

But the Epistle which comes to us as Polycarp’s own is of more importance. Who was Polycarp? The testimony of the early Christian Church to his special position is clear, copious, and authentic. Irenæus, in a touching letter to a friend of his own youth, shows how high was Polycarp’s social position, and how honoured he was because of his having in his earlier days heard the truth from John and others who had seen the Lord, and how entirely his reminiscences harmonised with the written records<sup>1</sup> of the Lord's miracles and teaching.<sup>2</sup>

From Irenæus (B. III. 3), also, we have a formal and deliberate testimony to the position of his old teacher, which we must quote in full.<sup>3</sup>

"And Polycarp, who was not only instructed by Apostles, and had intercourse with many who had seen Christ, but was also appointed for Asia by Apostles in the church that is in Smyrna, an overseer, whom also we have seen in the beginning of our life, for he remained a long time, and at an exceedingly old age, having borne his testimony gloriously and most notably, departed this life, always taught these things, which also he learned from the Apostles, which also he gave to the Church, and which alone are true. To these doctrines testimony is also borne by all the churches throughout Asia, and by those who have been up till this time the successors of Polycarp, who was a much more trustworthy and secure witness of the truth than Valentinus and Marcion and the rest, who held wicked opinions. He [Polycarp] also sojourned at Rome in the time of Anicetus, converted many from the previously mentioned heretics to the Church of God, having proclaimed that he had received from the Apostles this as the one and only truth which he had delivered to the Church. And there are those who heard him say that John, the disciple of the Lord, having gone to bathe in Ephesus, on seeing Cerinthus inside, leaped from the bathing establishment without bathing, and exclaimed, 'Let us flee, lest the baths fall in, since Cerinthus, the enemy of truth, is within.' And Polycarp himself, when Marcion one time met him and said, 'Do you recognise us?' answered, 'I recognise the firstborn of Satan.' Such was the caution which the Apostles and their disciples took not to have even verbal communication with those who perverted the truth: as Paul also said, 'A heretical man avoid after a first and second admonition, knowing that such an one has been turned away, and sins, being self-condemned.'"

In still another passage (Eus. II. E. V. 24), Irenæus gives some further particulars of Polycarp's sojourn at Rome in the time of Anicetus,—showing that he was recognised as a representative of the followers of the Apostle John. The passage itself falls to be considered in another connection as bearing on what has become known as the "Paschal Controversy" (see text, p. 192). But for our present purposes it is enough to use this passage of Irenæus, and the references in Eusebius, as attesting that Polycarp was the disciple of the Apostle John.

So much for the personality of the author. When did he live and die? As a pupil of John and other eye-witnesses, he must have been old enough before the end of the first century to appreciate the teachings of the Apostles;<sup>4</sup> and as he died at the stake about the middle of

<sup>4</sup> If we accept the tradition that just before his death he declared he had served Christ eighty and six years, and admit (see below) that he was killed in A.D. 155, the date of his birth is A.D. 69. If John lived till the time of Trajan, Polycarp was about thirty years old when the aged Apostle died.

the second century,<sup>1</sup> he is the most important living link between the writers whose works are the foundation of Christianity, and those others, such as Irenæus, whose works are the beginning of undoubted Christian treatises on the canonical Scriptures. There is some doubt as to the exact date of his death, contending critics upholding various years between A.D. 140 and 168. The date most recently maintained is A.D. 155; but, as our footnote shows, its acceptance leaves us at issue with some ancient authorities. There is not much difficulty in ascribing to the Epistle a date some time near the middle of the second century.

In regard to the letter itself. Its importance has led to its being very minutely scrutinised. Most of it exists in Greek; but part is only in an old Latin version, and where we have both they do not always correspond. This at the very outset awakens some suspicion, and in this fact the most important objections to the letter have their root. There is one objection founded on an alleged contradiction. In chap. 9 the writer speaks of the patience which the Philippians have seen before their eyes "in the blessed Ignatius, and Zosimus, and Rufus, and others,"<sup>2</sup> those martyrs being evidently dead. But in chap. 13 he asks (according to the Latin) for some tidings of Ignatius and those who are with him—Ignatius being thus referred to as still alive.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Contending critics have had new ground opened for them in the researches of M. Waddington. In his "Mémoire sur la Chronologie de la vie du rhéteur Ælius Aristide" (Mem. of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres, Jan. 27, year 1867), he set himself to establish that the date of Polycarp's martyrdom was February 155. It is impossible to exaggerate the respect with which every one must regard the careful and exhaustive summary of valuable details—from literature, coins, and imperial edicts—which is presented in this memoir. In his 'Fastes des Provinces Asiatiques' (1872), M. Waddington presents fuller details most methodically arranged (see on Quadratus, p. 220). The result is as already stated, and the majority of critics accept it. The strong point of a general kind is that on the ordinary date, A.D. 166, it is not possible to give Polycarp a mature age while the Apostle John lived. "Eighty and six years have I served Christ," were Polycarp's words; and whether we begin to reckon from his birth or his baptism, we have him a very young man in the year A.D. 100, about which time John died. Another point is that Quadratus governed Asia A.D. 154, 155; and that in his time (if we are to take the letter of the church of Smyrna as an authority) Polycarp suffered. The greater number of scholars have followed Waddington very closely (Lipsius, Echhardt, and Hilgenfeld differing only by a year, and saying A.D. 156), and thus discard Eusebius, Jerome, and the Paschal Chronicle, which agree in fixing the martyrdom after the accession of M. Aurelius (A.D. 161),—Eusebius making the date A.D. 166, and Jerome A.D. 167. The day of the week and the day of the month in the Julian year coincided every eleven years (Wieseler), and many of the marks of time would suit either A.D. 155 or A.D. 166. Wieseler (Die Christenverfolgungen der Cæsaren) defends the date of Eusebius. He founds upon the common consent of antiquity that Polycarp suffered in the reign of Marcus Aurelius, and on the visit of Polycarp to Rome in the episcopate of Anicetus, which began A.D. 157 or 158. Keim (Aus dem Urchristenthum) protests against blindly following Waddington, and examines with characteristic care and force the letter of the church of Smyrna. Lightfoot in Cont. Rev., vol. xxv. p. 838, follows Waddington.

This sentence closes the chapter in the Latin,—the Greek, which is preserved in Eus. H. E. III. 36, stopping short without it. Defenders of the genuineness of the letter, as a whole, admit that c. 13 is not genuine, but an interpolation,—and indeed it is very like one; or say that the Greek only is genuine, this Latin addition being spurious; or say that the Latin is a mistranslation,—that the Greek was probably the indefinite phrase περὶ τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, and that the Latin qui cum eo sunt gives erroneously present time.<sup>1</sup> At all events the circumstances do not warrant us in casting away the Epistle as a whole. Another objection is founded on the apparent indications of date as inconsistent with the authorship of Polycarp. Thus “Pray for kings” (Orate pro regibus) is supposed to indicate a date in the time of the joint rule of Marcus Antoninus and Verus; but, as a matter of fact, Justin Martyr uses the word βασιλεῖς in reference to Antoninus Pius and M. Aurelius. Besides, the injunction is probably general, as in 1 Pet. ii. 17; it certainly reproduces the exhortation of 1 Tim. ii. 2, παρακαλῶ . . . ποιῆσθαι δεήσεις . . . ὑπὲρ βασιλέων καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντων. Again, the references to heresies are said to aim so clearly at Doketes, and especially at Marcionites, as to be too late for Polycarp; but this cannot be established.<sup>2</sup> It has been supposed that by thus finding indications of a late date it would be possible to discredit the Epistle; but its genuineness is too well established to be overturned by such arguments. As far as any literary production can be regarded as of assured antiquity, this can; and although there may be some uncertainty as to the very year of its origin, its being written by Polycarp is quite certain. And if it really be Polycarp's, the particular date of writing is not of much moment. In any case, it will contain the testimony of John's disciple to the common creed of the Christian Church from the beginning.

We are thus led to examine the passages in which Polycarp comes into contact with the New Testament. But when we adduce particular passages, we must not forget that not in such passages only, but in its whole tone and texture, and in the spirit which it breathes, does this Epistle remind us of the New Testament.

If we could depend upon the Latin version of c. 12 (the Greek

<sup>2</sup> Irenæus (B. III. 3, 4) tells us that Polycarp called Marcion the firstborn of Satan, —πρωτότοκος τοῦ Σατανᾶ; and some have argued that the use of the same words in reference to the denial that “Jesus Christ came in the flesh” is the doing of a forger using the phrase as a catchword to make the Epistle appear to be Polycarp's. But there is nothing distinctive of Marcion in the heresy opposed in this Epistle.

unfortunately fails us), we should have two quotations,—one from Ps. iv. 4 and the other from Eph. iv. 26 joined together,—as being both from the Scriptures, which are called in one clause Sacra litera, and in another hæ Scriptura.<sup>1</sup>

The principal passage is Ep. to Phil. c. 2, 3 (see p. 112 of our text). The peculiarity of the passage is, that while it resembles both Matthew and Luke, and indeed seems to be made up of them both, it also resembles Clement, and more especially contains that clause ἐλεῖτε ἡμᾶς ἐλεηθῆτε in Clement, which is not found in the same form in the Gospels.<sup>2</sup> The favourite idea of some, that a lost Gospel is quoted, would really be acceptable here, were it not that Clement and Polycarp differ from each other, as well as from the canonical Gospels. Although they contain that one striking clause in common, their own clauses are in such different order that we cannot regard them as quoting from the same lost source.<sup>3</sup> It seems most natural to believe that they quoted from memory, and that Christian tradition had preserved that clause in this form, or added it to the injunctions embodied in our written records of the Sermon on the Mount.<sup>4</sup> We have a suggestively similar use by Polycarp of 1 Pet. ii. 20, &c. (see passage in our text, p. 305, and note there).

It may further be noticed, that although the writer usually weaves the words or thoughts of the New Testament into his sentences, there are two breaks, and two express quotations or references. He cites the words of Jesus with special solemnity: thus in c. 2 his words are, "As the Lord said teaching;" and in c. 7, "As the Lord said." In this he resembles Clement; and the practice is what we might expect at their early date. These we may call breaks in his writing; the following are quotations or references: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world, as Paul teaches?" (1 Cor. vi. 2); and again: "In these Scriptures it is said, 'Be ye angry and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath.'"—Eph. iv. 26 and Ps. iv. 4.

There can be no doubt that Polycarp used freely and frequently the First Epistle of Peter and the Epistles of Paul; but it is needless to dwell upon his citations. The reference to the First Epistle of John is so important in its bearing on the date of the Fourth Gospel, that we may refer to it here. We have a strong statement that he who doth not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is Antichrist (c. 7), and no one can deny that this is a fair condensation of the words of John (1 John iv. 3). It moreover contains John's familiar words: ἀντί-

<sup>4</sup> The fact that though the clauses in Polycarp are not in the same order as in Clement, they are in the same form (comp. extracts, pp. 105, 112), is of some significance; the question is to what the significance amounts. The student will find it interesting to compare the passages quoted in the paragraph.

χριστος, ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, ἐκ τοῦ διαβόλου. There being little doubt that the First Epistle is by the same author as the Gospel, this may be regarded as evidence for the "Gospel of John." It may be that there was "a formula in use in the early Church against various heretics," though no one knows about it; but the words of Polycarp, while quite consistent with the theory that the disciple was freely using his Master's thoughts and expressions, are not so consistent with the formal use of a "formula." Besides, the constant fleeing to some unknown work—an apocryphal Gospel, or a formula—for refuge from the pressure of obvious arguments in favour of the theory of quotation from our well-known canonical writings, is in itself uncritical.

Two remarkable allusions to St Paul are found, c. 3 :—

"These things, brethren, I write unto you concerning righteousness,—not because I take anything upon myself, but because you have invited me to do so. For neither I nor any such other one can come up to the wisdom of the blessed and glorified Paul. He, when among you, accurately and steadfastly taught the word of truth in the presence of those who were then alive. And when absent from you, he wrote you a letter, which, if you carefully study, you will find to be the means of building you up in that faith which has been given you, and which, being followed by hope, and preceded by love towards God and Christ, and our neighbours, is the mother of us all. For if any one be inwardly possessed of those graces, he hath fulfilled the command of righteousness, since he that hath love is far from all sin."

And again, c. 11 :—

"Do we not know that the saints shall judge the world, as Paul teaches. But I have neither seen nor heard of any such thing among you, in the midst of whom the blessed Paul laboured, and who are commended in the beginning of his Epistle. For he boasts of you in all those churches which alone knew the Lord; but we [of Smyrna] had not yet known Him."<sup>1</sup>

We could not ask stronger testimony, direct or indirect, to our New Testament than this. Its author—the disciple of John, and the teacher of Irenæus—was a leading and representative man among the Christians during his long life, and "in his old age," as Irenæus says, "had a glorious and splendid martyrdom." To whom, then, does this Saint testify? Not only to the Epistles of his own Master, but to St Peter, and to the writings of St Paul. There is no trace of jealousy; and he is one in spirit with all the "three mighty ones." His whole style closely resembles that of 1 Peter and of the later Epistles of St Paul; and it would seem as if the last of our inspired writings which moulded the faith of his youth, had also moulded his thought and formed his style.

It may not be out of place, in a book primarily designed for students of theology, to draw attention to a practical lesson. Polycarp—now old and revered—was asked by the Philippians to write them a letter. He accordingly exhorts them to Christian duty and faith; proclaiming the truth as it is in Jesus, “who” (as he says in c. 8) “bore our sins in His own body on the tree,” and “for our sakes was raised again from the dead:” but his words are not so remarkable even for their tender courtesy and touching humility, as for the fact that all his exhortations are based on the authority of Holy Scripture. It is not Polycarp as a man who speaks, but a fellow-sinner and fellow-Christian, who has no right nor title to address them, save in so far as God gives him grace to remind them of the revealed Word, which in his own experience he has found to be true and precious beyond all price. Those who are ministers of Christ, especially young ministers, may well take that old man as their model, and say little on their own authority, but let their hearers feel that it is God who beseeches them. It is poor preaching which makes people keep the personality of the preacher in mind. We are called to be followers of Polycarp, as “he also was of Christ.”

NOTE.

1. POLYCARP.

There are quotations in the text under the head of the various books of the New Testament, showing that Polycarp certainly quotes 1 Peter, 1 John, and several of the Epistles of Paul (indeed all of them, save perhaps Colossians, 2 Timothy, and Titus, and certainly Philemon); that he most probably had the synoptic Gospels (Matthew in particular); and that his use of the First Epistle of John may be supposed to carry a recognition of the fourth Gospel. The references to James, Jude, and 2 Peter are doubtful. I find no trace of the Apocalypse.

But in addition to quotations, we must notice what may be called echoes, or similarities of tone and thought. The following table (I am by no means sure of its being exhaustive, or of the apportionment being always correct) may indicate the amount of quotations and echoes in this remarkable little letter:—

The salutation is—“Polycarp, and the Presbyters who are with him, to the Church of God sojourning at Corinth, grace unto you and peace.”

VI.—PAPIAS.

It would be a great event in Biblical Criticism if the lost five books of Papias were found in some library, as it is not impossible they may yet be. Except their title, and a few scraps in Irenæus and Eusebius, and in writers long after their time, we really know nothing about the books of this old chronicler. The title of his treatise was “an Exposition (or Expositions) of the Oracles of the Lord”—Δογίων Κυριακῶν ἐξηγήσεις (or ἐξηγήσεις); and it seems to have been a collection of our Lord's most important sayings and doings, with Papias's own commentary, and certain additions to corroborate the commentary—these additions being drawn from what Papias had collected as unwritten reminiscences.<sup>1</sup> The importance of the book lies in the fact that Papias, like Polycarp, was a link between the apostolic age and that of Irenæus. Irenæus<sup>2</sup> calls him “Papias, a man of the olden time, the hearer of John and companion of Polycarp.” As Irenæus himself was a native of Asia Minor, and seems to have been at one time in Laodicea, it is neither impossible nor improbable that in his youth he had met the old Bishop of Hierapolis.<sup>3</sup> Eusebius, indeed, throws doubt upon the words of Irenæus, denying that Papias himself ever claimed to be a hearer and eyewitness of the holy Apostles. But Eusebius, with characteristic honesty, enables us to judge for ourselves, and a judgment in accordance with his is by no means unavoidable. Without here entering minutely into the controversy, it is enough to say that the few sentences which remain to us from Papias descriptive of his purpose may fairly be taken to mean that he at first learned not a little from the Apostles themselves,<sup>4</sup> and that afterwards, during his whole life, he had added to his personal reminiscences those which he was able to collect from other companions of the Apostles. His first words are, “I shall certainly not refuse to set down for you, along with my interpretations, what things I well learned from the elders, and well recorded [or remembered<sup>1</sup>], being well assured of the truth concerning them. For I was in the habit of taking delight (not like the many) in those having much to say, but in those teaching the things that are true: nor in those recalling the precepts of strangers, but in those recalling the things given by the Lord to faith [or, to make Christian verity], and proceeding from the truth itself [or, from the very Truth,—see John xiv. 6]. And if anywhere there chanced also to come one who had been in company with the Elders [see Luke's Preface], I inquired into the words of the Elders: what Andrew or what Peter said, or what Philip, or what Thomas (said), or James: or what John or Matthew or some other one of the disciples of the Lord (said): which things [or, what things] Aristion and John the Elder say. For I did not account myself so much indebted to the things which come from books, as to those which come from the living and abiding voice." (Text, p. 54.)

There can be no reasonable doubt that, from a natural interpretation of his words, we learn that at the time when Papias wrote, Aristion and the Presbyter John were living and adding to his stock of reminiscences. At a later period in his narrative, Eusebius tells us that Papias had received at least one wonderful narrative from the daughters of Philip the Apostle. There may be some doubt of his exact date, but there can be none as to his living at the period when our authorities are fewest, and every word they left unspeakably precious. Still further, Eusebius tells us that Papias, "who seemed very weak in the mind,"<sup>2</sup> had given a literal and physical interpretation of certain figurative prophecies spoken by our Lord. The subject of these prophecies was the millennium: and Eusebius, who was a keen anti-millennarian, denounces all those (he instances Irenæus) who were so led away "by respect for the antiquity of the man" as to follow his weak-headed expositions. In another passage, however, Eusebius calls him a very learned man.<sup>3</sup> There is some difficulty at first sight in believing that Eusebius at one time thus praised and at another thus disparaged Papias, and hence probably the omission of one of those expressions in some MS authorities. But it is quite possible to be a man of lore and yet not much of a thinker, so that Eusebius's estimate of the two sides of Papias's character may be allowed to remain, and is probably true. When, therefore, we find Papias giving <sup>1</sup> Ἐμνημόνευσα. We have this word used by Papias in the next sentence with the meaning "record" or "relate;" and in the comments of Eusebius which follow, we have it used in the same way,—"αὐτῶν μνημονεύσας." It may be taken in the same sense here, and may intimate that Papias from an early date took notes of what he heard from the Elders. If so, his ὅσα ποτὲ παρὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καλῶς ἔμαθον καὶ καλῶς ἐμνημόνευσα are words of special importance. They deliberately claim for his work all the accuracy of which pains and opportunity could make him capable. Διαβεβαιούμενος will convey the same idea of "well-grounded conviction" in his own mind.

interesting particulars regarding the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, the question with which we have mainly to do is not his intellect, but his honesty. If he knew our Gospels, they must have been in men's hands in his day : for "weakness of intellect does not enable one to speak of books as existing which are not in existence."<sup>1</sup>

This leads us to a somewhat more special inquiry as to what his day was. If he were really a disciple of the Apostles, and if he lived in Asia Minor at the time when John wrote his Gospel, he becomes a man of great importance in the controversies regarding the fourth Gospel, as well as regarding Matthew and Mark. We do not know when he was born, nor do we know when he died,<sup>2</sup> but he must have met many of the apostolic age ; and we may regard the disciple of John, the friend of Polycarp, the contemporary of Philip's daughters, the man who seemed to Irenæus a "man of the early times" (ἀρχαῖος ἀνὴρ), the man who knew both the "elders" and their younger associates, as having flourished during the first and second quarters of the second century, and as having lived from about A.D. 70 to about A.D. 150.

All that we have of Papias's writing will be found in our text. It is all quite consistent with his character as a well-intentioned caterer of tradition. It is not consistent with the theory that he was trying to compile either a supplement to our Gospels in an authoritative sense, or a substitute in any sense whatever. Nay, we must go further and add that, so far as those extracts go, they seem conclusively to point to a man who accepted the authoritative records of Christ's life which were accepted by the Church. If he speaks of the Gospels, it is to give some traditions regarding their origin which were likely to be of interest to future generations. If he speaks of the sayings of our Lord, it is to give an exposition of them, and to back up his own exposition by traditional expansion and illustrative anecdote.<sup>3</sup>

And what, then, does this "man of the olden time" say about our Gospels? In our text (p. 57) will be found proof that he gives explicit testimonies to the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, to the first Epistles of John and Peter, and to the Apocalypse of John. The reference to the Acts of the Apostles is doubtful, but I think it probably is made by Eusebius himself, and not by Papias. After Lightfoot's article on "The Silence of Eusebius"<sup>4</sup> there is no need to assume that Papias's references were confined to those books of the

canon. But there is abundant controversy as to the bearing of what Papias has undoubtedly said.

The main points are ( $\alpha$ ) that Matthew's Gospel was written in Hebrew, and ( $\beta$ ) that Mark's Gospel was composed from what Peter said in the course of preaching; ( $\gamma$ ) that the First Epistle of John was an authority to Papias, and ( $\delta$ ) an Epistle of Peter likewise. There is also a statement by Eusebius that "Papias brings forward another narrative about a woman accused of many crimes before the Lord. Which story," adds Eusebius, "the Gospel according to the Hebrews contains." Without entering on the controversy as to the rendering of the passages, which will speak for themselves, we may say that the notice of Matthew is far too fragmentary to bear much strain: and yet it has been used as though it were a rounded treatise. As it stands, it would naturally lead to an account of the origin of the Greek version of St Matthew, which terminated the time of confusion, when "every man" (i.e., every man who—like Papias himself?—did not know Hebrew very well) "interpreted as he was able" the original Hebrew of Matthew. As it stands,—and without reference to what may have followed,—it tells us that at first Matthew wrote in Hebrew, and that at that date there was some difficulty in many quarters in interpreting him, because the language was Hebrew. It does not tell us that this difficulty existed at the time when Papias wrote. It does not tell us that Matthew's λόγια, or oracles, were only sacred sayings;—for the natural meaning of λόγια is sacred oracles, whether containing narrative or speech.<sup>1</sup> (See note, p. 57.)

And as to Mark's Gospel, Papias (p. 56) tells us that Mark wrote with precision (ἀκριβῶς), but not in exact order (τάξει), the words and works of Christ. There has been infinite dispute as to the meaning of Papias's apologetic reference to the want of exact order (τάξις . . . σύνταξις) in Mark; but surely we might accept it as a fact that no one definite principle of arrangement, whether from regard to time or to subject, has yet been discovered for any one of our Gospels.<sup>2</sup> The want of this is quite consistent with each Gospel having a beginning and end determined by chronology. So far as Papias is concerned, we are left to the conclusion of the Muratorian Chronicler that, notwithstanding various differences, the essentials of the Christian faith are, under the direction of one supreme Spirit, taught in all the several books of our Gospels.<sup>3</sup> It is to be noted, also, that when we read of

<sup>2</sup> The arguments (e.g., Sanday's) to show that Mark's Gospel is probably nearer to the normal order than any other, seem to be beside the point. What Papias wants to say is, that Mark does not profess to have the one only true order; so that disputes on that head (such as seem to have been going on) are unnecessary.

<sup>3</sup> See Muratorian Fragment. It is there said that the differences are in the principia, which we may perhaps take to mean the heads of contents; and this may refer to the subject or to the arrangement of those heads.

Papias adducing testimonies from the First Epistle of John, we have every reason to believe that he used the Fourth Gospel as John's, for the common authorship of the Gospel and Epistle is too obvious to be seriously disputed.

NOTE.

The tradition that the Apostle John lived in Ephesus.

New interest has attached to the fragments of Papias since Keim's publication of his bold theory,<sup>1</sup> in which Papias plays a prominent part. Although it bears chiefly on the authorship of the fourth Gospel, and on some passages of Irenæus in connection therewith, it nevertheless has its origin in Papias, and may therefore be fitly considered at this stage. Keim admits, nay proves, the early date of the composition of the fourth Gospel, and places it in Trajan's time, between A.D. 110 and 117. As Irenæus expressly says (Book II. 22, 5) that John lived till Trajan's time—i.e., A.D. 98-117—we might suppose that the authorship of the fourth Gospel was at last settled by the critics. But Keim, while holding by the date, denies that the son of Zebedee is the Evangelist, and wishes to make out that another John, the Presbyter John, of whose very existence not a few able writers are doubtful, is the veritable hero of Church History in Asia Minor, and the true winner of the fame which has been allowed to gather round the name of the son of Zebedee. He charges the mistake originally upon Irenæus, from whom he says all others copied; and in denying that Papias knew John the Apostle, he also denies that Polycarp did. His position, shortly stated, is a denial that the Apostle John was ever in Ephesus. He dwells upon the absence of all allusion to John in Asia Minor by Ignatius and Polycarp in their genuine writings, and then comes to deal with the well-known statements of Papias, as contained in Eus. H. E. III. 39. He makes a great deal of Papias having had no intercourse with the Apostle John, or with any other Apostle; and asks how, that being so, it is possible to believe that Polycarp, his neighbour and friend, was so intimate with the son of Zebedee as tradition has made him out to be. The true solution, according to Keim, is, that the teacher of Papias and of Polycarp, the author of Papias's chiliastic hallucinations, and the hero of the traditions of Asia Minor, was not the son of Zebedee, but another John,—John the Presbyter.

We may sum up Keim's position thus :—

1. Papias did not know any Apostle: this Keim takes from Eusebius.
2. Papias had once known Aristion and John the Presbyter.
3. Papias had learnt from them what the Apostles said (Keim says Papias does not say this; but Keim infers it from other statements of Eusebius).
4. When Eusebius does mention John the Apostle, he puts him so low in the list of Apostles as to show that John had no more to do with Asia Minor than Matthew had.
5. John the Presbyter was the author of the chiliastic fantasies in the minds of Papias, Irenæus, and others.

To these it must be replied :—

1. That Keim is going too far in denying Papias's personal acquaintance with an Apostle. He may have known some of them, although his thirst for knowledge was so great, that he had always tried to learn from everybody who knew them what they had said about the Lord. It is quite possible to have known great men, and yet to be indebted to others for many reminiscences of them. And we have seen some reason to believe that this was so with Papias.

2. In point of fact, he does not say in the passage mainly founded on that he had even seen Aristion and John the Presbyter.

3. He had learnt from everybody what the Apostles said; and he seems to quote Aristion and John the Presbyter as confirming the trustworthiness of his memoranda.

4. The low place of John in the list either means nothing or too much for Keim's purpose; for if the list were taken for an order of merit, it would contradict the teaching of the New Testament, that John was at least greater than Philip or Thomas. Krenkel supposes that they were mentioned in the order of the date of their death (e. g., Philip died much earlier than John). Lightfoot suggests that they were mentioned in the same order as in John's Gospel. Had John the Presbyter been as famous as Keim supposes, would not Keim's own principles lead us to expect him to be earlier in the list of disciples than that obscure Aristion? Can it be that John and Matthew are mentioned together as being the two Evangelists?

5. Eusebius does not refer the hallucinations of Papias to John, but says that Papias misunderstood the apostolical expositions. Even if the "elders" quoted by Irenæus mean Papias, and such as he, any extravagances may be due to them, and not to their teacher.<sup>1</sup> In addition, let us note the well-known fact that Irenæus says he knew Polycarp intimately. (See Irenæus's letter to Florinus.) Is it conceivable that he could be mistaken as to the John of whom his master was wont to speak so constantly? Is it possible that he would have written to a fellow-scholar (now a Gnostic), reminding him of this John, if he were not sure that his correspondent knew for certain which John he meant? Further, if Irenæus were mistaken as to Polycarp's meaning, could he have continued under the mistake after reading Papias's book? We must conclude, after considering such questions as these, that Polycarp intended his disciples to suppose that he spoke of the son of Zebedee, and we cannot assume that the old man deliberately set himself to deceive them.

Finally, there is independent testimony in favour of John the Apostle having been in Ephesus. Apollonius, the anti-Montanist (A.D. 170-180), believed in the Ephesian residence of the Apostle John (Eus. H. E. V. 18); and Polycrates, Bishop of Ephesus (A.D. 180), expressly refers to "John who rested on the bosom of our Lord" as being buried in Ephesus.<sup>2</sup>

Tradition takes strange shapes, as we see in the reminiscences of Irenæus himself; but they are in matters of detail. History could never be written at all, if it were possible for Irenæus to be mistaken upon a subject so broad and momentous as Polycarp's training under the Apostle John.

VII.—BASILIDES.

It is scarcely possible to sketch the position of Basilides in the history of evidence for the canonical books without indicating his position as a philosophical teacher and the founder of a sect. He is said (Euseb. H. E. IV.) to have written "twenty-four books upon the Gospel;" and controversy immediately begins as to what "the Gospel" was, and what is meant by writing upon it? And the shortest answer to questions which spring up must include some notice of his general position.

Basilides was born in Syria, and was possibly, along with Saturninus, a disciple of Menander. He went to Egypt, like Cerinthus, and was known there about A.D. 125.<sup>1</sup> He seems also to have taught the Persians (see p. 390). He was the author of a notable Gnostic theory of the universe, and he claimed for it that it truly represented the teaching of Peter. His system is expounded at considerable length by Irenæus and by Hippolytus, and is often alluded to and confuted by Clement of Alexandria.<sup>2</sup> It is not easy to reconstruct it from these notices; nor is it always possible to say how far his followers had gone beyond his own lines.<sup>3</sup> But he seems to have sought to embrace all the universe in one plan, of which Jesus Christ is the centre, and to have broken down in the attempt to combine Egyptian speculation with Scripture truth. He was anxious, with Egyptian sages, to maintain that the supreme God cannot reveal Himself;<sup>4</sup> he was equally anxious, with Christians, to admit that the Old and New Testaments contain a real and true revelation; and so he invented "Archons" great enough to be authors of revelation. He did not take refuge in the notion of the inherent evil of matter: he believed creation and providence to be the works of God. He even said, "I would say anything rather than blame Providence."<sup>5</sup> The mysteries of the world he believed to be <sup>4</sup> Probably it was owing to his Egyptian training that he is said (see Eus. H. E. IV. 11) to have spoken of Barabbas and Barcoph as prophets, and others also. Isidore, his son, also commented on Parchor—(Clem. Alex., Strom. VI. 6, p. 767).

due to our inability to see causes and effects together. And yet when, in his attempt to lessen the mystery of creation out of nothing, he says that from the unknown supreme God there came a germ out of which all existing things were evolved, he is forced to hold that in this germ were several grades of being, of which the lowest seems to be somehow bound up meanwhile with material existence from which it will be eventually disengaged. It seems, therefore, as though the necessary result of the unthinkable God producing the germ was the production of the material world along with the spiritual. It seems as though moral evil were only imperfection caused by the proximity of some substance less refined than pure spirit. And from this tenet would easily come many of the gross immoral consequences in practical conduct with which even Clement of Alexandria charges his school.<sup>1</sup> Clement shows that a pure moral condition is not with the Basilideans a result of God's forgiveness and of the work of God in man, but of antecedent necessity arising from the composition of the human nature in the particular individual.<sup>2</sup> In short, with Basilides, as with all who magnify the influence of matter, the fact and the sense of sin were obscured.<sup>3</sup> Nevertheless Basilides scouted the idea of emanations,<sup>4</sup> and thought that he had bridged the chasm between spirit and the universe by the invention of his eggs or germs with resulting Archons—one the head of an ogdoad, and the other of a hebdomad; and he thought that he had found a central place for Jesus Christ<sup>5</sup> by representing Him as the embodiment of the great Gospel with which the Archon's Son enlightened all the principalities and powers, and all different orders of being, including man.

It is easy to see that his aim was to expand and explain the teaching of John's Gospel as to the creation by the Logos, and the mysterious allusions in some of the Pauline Epistles to God reconciling all things (τὰ πάντα) to Himself by Jesus Christ.<sup>6</sup> His system was a philosophy, not a religion: a philosophy, however, applying to practical life, and not merely an intellectual exercitation.

<sup>3</sup> See Clem. Alex., Strom. III. 1, p. 510, for an allegation that Isidorus recommended a man to gratify pressing lusts in order that he might pray with more devout mind.

<sup>5</sup> "Since it was needful that it should be revealed that we are the children of God, in expectation of whose revelation the creation groaned and habitually travailed in pain, the Gospel came into the world and permeated all authority and power and dominion, and every name that is named."—Hipp. 7, 13.

He did not wish to be an opponent of the Gospel; and he professed to represent the true doctrines of St Peter, which he had received through his teacher Glaucias, the interpreter of Peter.<sup>1</sup> He (or his followers for him) also claimed to expound the doctrine of Matthias, who had received it privately from the Saviour Himself.<sup>2</sup> In this, like other Gnostics, he wished to find some excuse for his obvious disagreement with the Gospel of Christ as ordinarily received among men. The twenty-four books of which Eusebius tells us—"exegetical books" Clement calls them; "tractates" according to Archelaus—seem to have been discourses advocating his own philosophy of religion. The curious paraphrases of important texts preserved by Hippolytus, and the equally curious ethical consequences which roused the wrath of Clement, seem to me to make this clear enough. And is there any improbability in the supposition that he issued also some abridgment of this as his own view of the Gospel—as Christianity according to Basilides?<sup>3</sup> Origen says: "Basilides was audacious enough to write a Gospel, and to call it by his own name." And Origen—or rather the Latin version of Origen's Homilies on Luke—remains our authority for this. Even if we take Origen's statement as fact, we cannot interpret this as meaning that Basilides used a form of the Gospel according to the Hebrews,<sup>4</sup> or that he set up any narrative as a rival to the canonical books, because we do not hear anything about such a book from those who wrote most fully of his system, and we do hear explicitly that he and his followers adopted the same account of the Saviour's life as other Christians did. After an account of Jesus' birth, Hippolytus (III. 27) says: "After His [Jesus'] birth had taken place as aforesaid, all things regarding the Saviour, according to them [the Basilideans], took place as has been written in the Gospels." And Clement tells us that they observed the night of the Lord's baptism as a festival, spending it in special reading.<sup>5</sup>

We conclude, therefore, from the allusions and quotations in early writers, that Basilides was not known to reject any of the books of the New Testament; that he set himself to reconcile the Christian Scriptures with Egyptian philosophy; that he wrote an elaborate treatise in twenty-four books on "the Gospel," by which we suppose that he meant the Christian system;<sup>6</sup> that his system led to well-understood

<sup>2</sup> See Hipp. VII. 20, and Clem. Alex., Strom. VII. 17. Some read "Matthew" here. According to Clement, it was the boast of Basilides's followers that he claimed Glaucias for his teacher,—"κάν Γλαυκίαν επιγράφεται διδάσκαλον ὡς ἀνχοῦσιν αὐτοί,"—whereas the claim to represent Matthew or Matthias may be the doing of his followers, although this is not clear. Hippolytus distinctly says that both Basilides and Isidore made this claim. He calls Isidore the "genuine son and disciple" of Basilides.

<sup>6</sup> I do not see that we can go further than this from the words of Eusebius; but consequences as to the evil of matter and the non-importance of bodily indulgence, which, in the lives of his followers, produced flagrant immorality. When we go further, and ask what the written records were from which he quoted, or on which he commented, we can not only say that he accepts the facts of ordinary Christian narrative, but we have also good grounds for believing that they were our canonical books, because we find passages from Matthew and Luke and John. Those passages are found in our text, with specific notes, and the reader is referred to them. They refer to the Magi and the star (Mat. ii. 1); to eunuchs and continence (Mat. xix. 11); to casting pearls before swine (Mat. vii. 6); to the Holy Spirit overshadowing the mother of Jesus, and the power of the Highest coming upon her (Luke i. 35); to the saying of Jesus found in the Fourth Gospel, "Mine hour is not yet come" (John ii. 4); and, above all, to the language of the Prologue, "This is the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world" (John i. 9). There are numerous passages from the epistles also. These references have additional importance from the fact that they are preceded by such phrases as τὸ εἰρημένον, ὡς γέγραπται, ἡ γραφή λέγει.<sup>1</sup> It is to be observed, also, that when we are told of the Basilideans accepting the Gospel record, it is described as "what is written in the Gospels;"<sup>2</sup> and when the Prologue to John is quoted, it is as "said in the Gospels." Do we go beyond the indications when we conclude that while "the Gospel" meant the "Christian system," the Basilideans acknowledged a plurality of books which correspond with our own, and that they termed these, as we do, "the Gospels"?

But it is said in reply that the quotations of Hippolytus are so indefinite as to make it doubtful whether he quoted from Basilides himself or from some Basilidean of much later date.<sup>3</sup> The value of the quotations from John depends on the weight attached to this reply. It does not seem to me possible to read Hipp. VII. 22, with its distinct we can certainly deny, on the strength of the passage, any theory that Basilides's work was a commentary on his own Gospel. Hippolytus (Ref. 7, 27) says: "Gospel is with the Basilideans the knowledge of supra-mundane things;" and he goes on to define these as the Holy Spirit and the Sonship, and adds: "This, according to them, is the Gospel," τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. This meaning is also found in the passage quoted in a previous note (see note 3), to the effect that the Gospel is the revelation that we are the sons of God.

<sup>3</sup> Hipp., VII. 19, says that Basilides will be convicted of foisting Aristotelian philosophy upon the Gospel, so that his followers will be made to see that they are pagans, not true Christians at all. Then he goes on (VII. 20) to show how manifestly Basilides, as well as Isidore and their whole sect, give the lie not only to Matthew, but to the Saviour Himself.

bearing on Basilides himself, as shown by the way Hippolytus introduces him, and to suppose that any one but Basilides is meant as the author by whom the Prologue to John (i. 9) is founded upon.<sup>1</sup> The other quotation in c. 27 naturally seems to be made by Basilides also, even although, in the following sentence, the whole school (κατ' αὐτοῖς) are said to apply the doctrine to the spiritual man within the natural man. But even if we give up the second, the first mentioned of the citations from John by Basilides remains distinct. This is a question of fact to which no doubt a reader's prepossessions tend to shape his reply, however much he may strive to be impartial. But I would submit that the difficulty of referring it to any other than Basilides is enormous.<sup>2</sup> The fundamental written dogma of the school is at stake; Hippolytus is showing how that dogma was against the theory of emanations: he is not dealing (as Clement often did) with practical consequences, but with the very foundation itself; and if that foundation was not laid by Basilides himself, by whom was it laid? Beyond the trouble into which opponents of the authenticity of John are put by Basilides's quoting, is there any ground for believing that in the Basilidean school there was another great philosopher and writer subsequent to the founder's own day who was accepted, when Hippolytus wrote eighty or a hundred years after, as the true representative and champion of Basilidean philosophy? We know of Basilides and his works; we know he had many followers, who are often spoken of as plural; but who is this other notable one?<sup>3</sup> It can hardly have been Isidore, who was a much inferior man to his father;<sup>4</sup> and we know not that any other existed great enough.

But again, it is said that the very use of the formula, "It is written," &c., shows that the citations are not made by Basilides, because in his day such formulae were not applied to the New Testament. Is not this, however, to beg the question? If Basilides applied them, they were so applied. "But," says the author of 'Supernatural Religion,' "the writings of pseudo-Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Papias, <sup>1</sup> In one passage (VII. 26) Hipp. seems to distinguish between the primary doctrines of Basilides and the secondary ones (Abraxas, &c.) of his followers. See φησί and κατ' αὐτοῖς. It is often said that in Hipp. V. 7 we have φασίν of Ἕλληνες, and then soon after Pindar quoted with φησί, though Pindar is not named. But is it not rather the representative of the Naassenes who is referred to? He was quoted with φησί in the hymn of the previous chapter, and now it is not Pindar but this same man as using the hymn (which the Greeks use) that is quoted.

Hegesippus, and others of the Fathers, in several ways positively demonstrate that the New Testament writings were not admitted, even amongst orthodox Fathers, to the rank of Holy Scripture until a very much later period.”<sup>1</sup> It is not easy to say what he means in this connection by pseudo-Ignatius or his date, seeing that he refers the Ignatian epistles elsewhere to the end of the second or beginning of the third century,—“if indeed they possess any value at all.” Is “Ignatius,” after all, a genuine witness for the usage in Basilides’s day? Or does he mean to say that in the beginning of the third century men did not regard the New Testament as Scripture? As to Justin Martyr, he wrote no commentary on the Gospel which has come to our day, nor did he found a philosophical system on it; and his Apology to heathen, and disputation with a Jew, are works of a very different kind from a treatise intended to commend Christian philosophy to Christians. Reverent quotations are natural in such a treatise—natural even if the reverence were consciously hollow,—still more natural if Basilides had honestly convinced himself that his philosophy was a framework in which the Gospel truths could be combined in new beauty and power. On Polycarp—we presume the epistle bearing his name is meant—the author heaps strong condemnation elsewhere, saying that “upon no internal ground can any part of this epistle be pronounced genuine; there are potent reasons for considering it spurious, and there is no evidence of any value whatever supporting its authenticity. In any case it could only be connected with the very latest years of Polycarp’s life,”—i.e., some time after A.D. 160, when he was a deputy sent to Rome. And how, then, can an unauthentic letter of, say A.D. 162, tell us how a philosopher and legate, thirty years before, was likely to use written Gospels? As to the scraps of Papias, and the fragments of Hegesippus, it is really beside the point to speak of them in this connection. We might indeed found on Papias’s testimony to the existence of Matthew and Mark before his time, and on what Hegesippus tells us of the purity and sound doctrine of the Church everywhere in his day. We might show from them how necessary it would be for Basilides to deal respectfully with the Christian records if he wished to get a hearing from contemporary Christians. But without taking any such positive ground, we may well negatively remind ourselves that to quote fragments of chroniclers and historians as guides in what must have been the mode of quotation adopted by a philosophical exegete is unwarrantable.

We conclude, therefore, that Basilides knew, quoted, and commented upon John’s Gospel about the end of the first quarter of the second century.<sup>2</sup>

NOTE ON THE SYSTEM OF BASILIDES.

There is some difficulty in reconciling Irenæus and Hippolytus in the accounts they give of the system. Some (see Luthardt, St John, p. 100) give up the problem. But it may be suggested that Irenæus seems to begin lower down in the stream of Basilides's thought than Hippolytus. Irenæus seems to strike in at the stage of the Archons. Irenæus speaks of the "unknown Father," who may be regarded as "the unknown God" in the account given by Hippolytus; but he says that "Nous was the first-born of the unborn Father, and Nous is the Christ who came at a later stage to bestow deliverance on them that believe in Him from the power of those who made the world. He appeared then on earth as a man to the nations of these powers, and wrought miracles." In this Irenæus seems to regard the chief Archon as the unborn Father; and, omitting the incomprehensible superfluous speculations on the Deity and the germ, to begin at once with the supreme Archon. We seem to have in his account an enumeration of the powers or attributes that composed the Ogload of which Hippolytus speaks elliptically; for although Irenæus does not speak of the Ogload, he does enumerate Nous, Logos, Phronesis, Sophia, Dunamis, as successive generations—five in number; and we learn from Clem. Alex. that Dikaosune and Eirene were also in the list. These, with the Supreme Being, make an Ogload, and thus we have Irenæus in substantial agreement with Hippolytus, although he gives rather the substance and issues than the foundation of the speculations of Basilides. Hence those speculations appear more pantheistic in Hippolytus, more dualistic in Irenæus,—the former being the intention of the philosopher, but the latter the necessity which ruled him.

VIII.—JUSTIN MARTYR.

JUSTIN MARTYR,—a native of Samaria, apparently a Gentile by birth, certainly uncircumcised; originally a student of philosophy (the Platonic in particular), afterwards attracted to the side of the Christians by their disregard of carnal enjoyments and their contempt for death, and finally, not only a believer in the Gospel, but a witness for it in various parts of the earth, even unto death,—is especially important in the history of the canon, because of the position he occupies as equidistant from the Apostle John on the one hand and Irenæus on the other. In recent years the recovery of the long-lost work of Hippolytus, and of the close of the Clementine Homilies, has made Justin's testimony less solitary than it seemed formerly to be. When the philosophical Gnostic,<sup>1</sup> as reported by Hippolytus, founds upon John's Gospel, and the ultra-Judaic Christian<sup>2</sup> does the same, the contemporary (or subsequent) testimony of Justin is no longer an isolated position open to attack from all sides.

But still there is something special in Justin's work which demands close attention. His first "Apology" was probably presented to the Roman emperor between A.D. 139 and A.D. 146. It is about 40 years since the Apostle John died; 30 or 40 years afterwards (A.D. 177) Irenæus succeeded to the bishopric of Lyons. We do not know for certain the date of Justin's birth, but he was in all probability a contemporary of both the Apostle and the great Gallican Bishop. The Asiatic and the Roman Churches with which they were respectively associated must have been familiarly known to him, for his "Dialogue" was held in Ephesus, and he lived also in Rome. He is a link, too, between what we may call the direct line and many collateral sections of the Christian Church. Being a native of Samaria, he speaks of the great Samaritan heresiarch Simon, as one whose life and work in Rome and in Samaria were familiarly known to him. Menander, the other Samaritan heretic, had disciples still living who believed in his promise that because of their adherence to him they should never die. And though his work against the great heretic of Sinope is unfortunately lost, we know that he was well aware of the nature of the heresy. "And there is Marcion, a native of Pontus, who is even at this day alive and teaching his disciples to believe in some other God greater than the Creator."<sup>1</sup>

It is even possible that Rome may have contained within its walls at one and the same time Marcion, Cerdo, Tatian, Valentinus, and Justin Martyr. We have knowledge of what Marcion's Canon contained; we know that Tatian, Justin's pupil, made a harmony of the four Gospels;<sup>2</sup> we know that Valentinus used a complete canon (integrum instrumentum); we know how clear and full is the testimony of Justin's younger contemporary, Irenæus, to the existence and general reception of all the principal parts of our canon; and we might expect to find Justin giving evidence on the same side. If the Gospels and Epistles received by Irenæus were the same as Justin used, then is our chain of testimony complete.

But here arises the question which has for a hundred years bulked more largely than any other in the critical controversies regarding the history of the canon. There can be no doubt that Justin makes large and interesting reference to the life and words of Jesus Christ; and there can be no doubt that he refers for evidence to written documents. There can be no doubt of the substantial conformity of his version of evangelical history with that of our Gospels; but the question is, whether the canonical Gospels are the sources of his quotations? It has been alleged that he quoted from the now lost "Ur-Evangelium" or primary Gospel, or that (Stroth) the mysterious "Gospel of the Hebrews" is his authority. It has been alleged that he quoted from apocryphal books, either in preference to, or along with, the canonical: and, on the other hand, it has been alleged—more accurately, we think—that he knew and habitually cited our canonical books, but that he cited them loosely from memory, and that he did not hesitate on occasion to weave into his statement such additional particulars as he derived from tradition or from apocryphal sources.

<sup>2</sup> Is it possible that Justin used a harmony, which the pupil afterwards developed into the famous Diatessaron? or that Justin's mode of quoting, by fusing the synoptic narratives into such consistency as served his purpose, suggested to Tatian the idea of thoroughly fusing them? It is doubtful if Tatian's was a "harmony" in the sense of collocation. Certainly Tatian's was not the same as Justin's, because Tatian omitted the genealogies, and the descent of Jesus from David.

We turn to his writings to learn for ourselves. But the first fact which strikes us is, that the peculiar nature of those works limits very much the amount of direct testimony which they can give. His genuine writings are now generally admitted to be three in number—if indeed they be not two. There are two Apologies<sup>1</sup> (or more probably two parts of one Apology) presented to a heathen emperor; and a Dialogue with Trypho, a Jew. The very nature of the case prevents us from expecting, in such writings, references to the books of the New Testament as inspired authorities. The object of the Apology is to defend Christians from many foul accusations brought against their life and character by the vulgar rumours of Rome. Justin proves that Christians are honourable (c. 12); peace-loving and continent (c. 21); good citizens (c. 17); followers of one whom ancient prophecies foretold (c. 47); that they use a simple ritual (chaps. 65, 67), and practise the most self-denying charity towards one another as brethren, and as under the eye of one God and Maker of all. "We continually remind ourselves of these things, and the wealthy among us help the needy; and we always keep together: and for all things wherewith we are supplied, we bless the Maker of all, through His Son Jesus Christ, and through the Holy Ghost."<sup>2</sup> It is obvious, when we consider the object in the writer's view, that there could be little direct quotation in the "Apology," and that all we can expect is a general agreement in tone and apparent historical basis with our Scriptures. That agreement we have beyond all question. But we have not such appeals to the New Testament as Irenæus and Tertullian make when discussing some point of doctrine; and we have no right to expect them. It is the unvarying characteristic of Christian apologists not to quote the Gospels by the titles in use among Christians. In other works they did so quote the Gospels, but never in their "Apologies" addressed to the heathen. The argument that because Justin does not name our evangelists, he did not know them, would, if applied to others, lead to absurd results. It would prove that Tatian, who never names them in his oration to the Gentiles, did not know them, though we know that he wrote a harmony of the four; that Tertullian, who, in his Apology, never names them, and seldom uses their language, did not know them, though his other writings are a rich mine of distinct quotation; that even Cyprian did not know them, because in his defence of Christianity, addressed to a heathen, he does not name them.<sup>1</sup>

We turn from the Apology to the Dialogue with Trypho, and we find that it turns upon the Scriptures—but it is upon the Old Testament. Justin represents himself as accosted by Trypho one day when he was walking; and in the conversation which ensued, it soon appeared that although Trypho was a student of Greek philosophy, he was also a Jewish fugitive from the recent war of Barcocheba. Trypho, representing the prejudice of his nation, charged all Christians with having accepted a baseless rumour as the foundation of their religion, and with having formed a kind of Christ for themselves, so that they were perishing thoughtlessly. Justin began to defend his creed; and as his opponent and he had one point in common—acceptance of the Old Testament Scriptures—the argument (see chaps. 32, 55, 56, 71) turns upon it. Not that the Christian records were ignored, for Trypho had read them (c. 10), and Justin therefore says that he does not think it absurd to quote the short records of the Saviour's doings along with the prophecies.<sup>2</sup> But Justin uses the Christian books only as historical material for his position, that Jesus Christ of Nazareth, who lived and died and rose again, is the Revealer of the Father and the Saviour of men; and the aim of the Dialogue is to show that the true meaning of the very words of the Prophets and Psalms and Pentateuch is fulfilled in this Christ. It is clear that in an argument of this kind, verbal dependence on the Gospels or Epistles of the New Testament is not to be expected. But it is equally clear that if our sacred books be the records of the truth, as held by the Church of the first days, we shall find in this dialogue that the Christ of whom Justin discoursed so copiously is the same as He of whom our evangelists wrote, and whom Paul preached. Now that the Christ to whom Justin gave his soul is the Redeemer whom we worship, we have abundant proof.

Jesus Christ, according to Justin, is the God who manifested Himself unto Israel of old, for no man ever saw the Father who is Lord of all; He is the Word (see Dial. chaps. 146, 147, &c.); the Son of God, who became man (Apol. I. 5); was born of a virgin, sheltered in Egypt, grew up in obscurity until He was 30 years of age, taught, healed, did miracles, was crucified, dead and buried, and the third day rose again; filled His disciples with knowledge, and gave them their commission to teach all nations; was the light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of His people Israel. In short, the incidents of the Saviour's birth, life, death, and rising again, as the incarnate Son of God, are actually stated or unquestionably implied in Justin's writings. His teaching also is beautifully represented (see Dial. 93, and also Apol. I., chaps. 15, 16, 17, 18).

Thus there can be no doubt of the substantial agreement of Justin's Gospel with the Synoptic Gospels; but the question comes to turn upon the form of Justin's citations and references. Can it be that Justin used the first form of the Gospel—πρῶτον εὐαγγέλιον—now lost, which was afterwards altered so as to take on, after much labour, the form of our present Gospels?

We shall most succinctly define what we believe to be the true position in the controversy regarding Justin's quotations, by noting these three points.

1. While Justin based his proof of Christianity on the Old Testament as a whole, he founded especially on Old Testament prophecy. His most elaborate arguments are expositions of Psalms xxii. (Dial. 98-106), cx. (c. 33), and lxxii. (c. 34). To him almost all the Old Testament is Messianic. His quotations from the Old Testament prophecies are—as it is obviously indispensable that they should be—explicit, accompanied (not always correctly) with the name of the author from whom the quotation is made; and while shorter passages seem to be quoted from memory, the longer are verbally correct. It is noteworthy, also, that the only book of the New Testament which he quotes by name is the only prophetic book—the Apocalypse—from which he cites the passage predicting the millennium.

2. He alluded to the Gospels as historical documents, though he did not claim for them (it is not clear how his object in quoting would have been served by doing so) the same position as for the Old Testament prophecies. He appeals to them as historical documents under the name of ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν ἀποστόλων.<sup>1</sup> He describes them as containing "all things which concern our Saviour Jesus Christ"—Apol. II. 75. He says they "were written by the Apostles, and are called

Gospels."<sup>1</sup> He says they were read on Sundays to the congregations, along with (and apparently on the same level as) the writings of the prophets, and that oral public teaching of the audience was founded on their contents—Apol. 1, 67. Nay more, in words which remind us of St Luke's Preface,<sup>2</sup> he says, "In the Memoirs which I affirm to have been composed by his Apostles, and those who followed with them, it is written that sweat fell from Him like drops of blood while He was praying, and saying, Let this cup, if it be possible, pass from me"—Dial. c. 103.<sup>3</sup> In these expressions separate works are apparently alluded to: on other occasions the word εὐαγγέλιον<sup>4</sup> seems to be applied in the same general way as by ourselves, to denote the tenor of the written records of Christianity (see Dial. 10, 100). But when Justin is under the necessity of advancing statements of facts which are recorded in the Gospels, he refers to them as the authoritative books of the Christians, lest it should be supposed that he is drawing on his own imagination for his facts.<sup>5</sup>

In thus quoting the "Memoirs," Justin quotes books which were not only accessible but also known to opponents, whether heathen or Jewish. Trypho says he has read them. It is therefore clear that there were in Justin's day certain well-known historical documents whose contents were "The Gospel;" which were themselves called "Gospels;" which were written by Apostles and their companions; and whose characteristics are indicated in Justin's term "Memoirs"—Memorabilia. Everything here seems to identify those Memoirs of Justin's with our canonical books. It is true he does not quote them by name in his works which remain; but it would have been cumbersome to do so. His one New Testament quotation, which he accompanies with the name of its author, is so extremely circuitous and circumstantial, as to show why he makes that kind of reference very rarely. "And a certain man among ourselves, whose name was John, one of the Apostles of Christ, in the Revelation which was made to him, prophesied that those who believe in our Christ will spend a thousand years in Jerusalem." There is something very suggestive in this circumlocution (Dial. 81).

3. Justin's position in the history of the Church accounts for the nature and limits of his quotations. His lifetime stretched across the period

<sup>1</sup> It seems idle to discuss the assertion that this clause is an interpolation. There is no ground for it, save that it is necessary to the theory that Justin's "Memoirs" are not our Gospels. But since the assertion is made, the passage cannot of itself be conclusive proof that Justin used our synoptics.

which connected the traditions with the written records of the life of Christ; for during it the men whose ears had heard the first oral preaching of Christ's Gospel died out, and it was therefore the time when the indispensable necessity of written Gospels was first clearly seen. We do not assume that he quoted our canonical Gospels; but it is right to notice that if he did use them, it was natural that he should use them freely, not slavishly, and also that he should supplement them with little items derived from traditional or apocryphal sources. To account for his using them freely, let us remember that Justin must have met with many who had heard the first Apostles preach,—hundreds, we may say, who knew John in Ephesus. And in such circumstances, general allusions to the written records, rather than strict verbal quotations from them, are what we may expect.

Nor need we wonder if he so supplements the canonical Gospels as to agree with some apocryphal writers in forms of expression which had come down to him and them by tradition. One or two passages, too trifling to bear much strain, show this amount of agreement with the Clementine Homilies. The text<sup>1</sup> shows that the agreement is accompanied by striking divergences: and the passages themselves are quoted in remarkably various ways by early authors, both orthodox and heretical. One or two other passages contain incidents the same as are recorded in our Gospels, but with additions of no great moment, such as may have come to Justin from apocryphal books or from oral tradition. That Jesus was born in a cave near the village of Bethlehem; that the Magi came from Arabia; that Herod slew all the children of Bethlehem; that Jesus as a carpenter made ploughs and yokes emblems of righteousness; that a fire was kindled on the Jordan at the baptism of Jesus; that the voice from heaven at the baptism said, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; that proofs of Jesus' miracles, and the events of the day of the crucifixion, are to be found recorded in an official register called the Acts of Pilate,—these are the chief, indeed all the important, peculiarities of Justin's evangelical narrative. They are examined in detail in the text;<sup>2</sup> but the general remark may be made here, that with one exception they are not said by Justin to be taken from the Memoirs, or from any other book. That exception (p. 126), moreover, only alleges the authority of the Memoirs for the part of the narrative which is not apocryphal. Even, however, if each and all of them were shown to be quotations of Justin from other than canonical sources,—nay, even if it were shown that all of them, like all Justin's other quotations, came from some one apocryphal book now lost,—to what would it amount? Simply to this, that the book was amazingly like our Gospels; that throughout the whole marvellous history of Christ, its narrative is identical with them in every point of any moment, and that its variations are in trifles only; that if we had it in our hands, it would (so far as we can judge from those specimens) add less, infinitely less, to the historical incidents than any one of our synoptists does. It is not therefore a competing, a contradictory, or an incompatible book; and its existence—if it were established—would only show how thoroughly consolidated and consistent was the Gospel narrative accepted in the early Church. But farther, as a matter of fact, the existence of any such Gospel in Justin's time cannot be established. That Jesus worked as a carpenter may be inferred from St Mark, and it is of little moment to suppose that Justin's allusion (Dial. c. 88) to the ploughs he made is drawn from the Gospel of Thomas, or from the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy. The Ebionite Gospel contained the tradition of the fire on the Jordan, but we have no proof that it contained the other incidents wherewith Justin supplements the canonical narrative. It may be that the Gospel of the Hebrews contained the saying, "In what things soever I find you, in these also shall I judge you;" but of this we have no proof. But the inference that any one of those books, or some other which contained the materials of them all, was the book which Justin quoted, is not warranted by evidence. It is indeed an assumption; for we know nothing of any one of those books warranting a belief that it was complete enough to be Justin's authority. The best known of them all—the Gospel of the Hebrews—omitted the narrative which forms the first two chapters of St Matthew.<sup>1</sup> It cannot, therefore, have been to it that Justin was indebted.

From what has been stated, and especially from those three general propositions, we therefore conclude that Justin was acquainted with our synoptic narratives; and that he was indebted to oral tradition, or to those apocryphal Gospels which embodied it, for certain supplementary matters which we find in his writings. And this is exactly what we should expect from one writing in the period between the days of oral teaching and those of entire dependence on written evangelic narratives.

The objections which are pressed against this conclusion rest mainly on the name Justin gives to his authority, and on the want of verbal correspondence between his expressions and the words of our canonical Gospels.

The name which Justin uses—"Memoirs"—is not, so far as we know, the title of any book or collection of books used in the early Church. It is not intended to be a title: it is a description, and as such is quite correct.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The argument that Justin must mean one work, not several works, is based on a misconception. Ξενοφάντος ἀπομνημονεύματα was one book, but its genitive is singular. When we have τῶν ἀποστόλων for the dependent genitive, we may conclude that he means several works. In one place Justin speaks of ἐν τοῖς ἀπ. αὐτοῦ, when the last word seems from the context to mean Peter. And by this phrase, "Peter's

It is true that Justin's quotations from our Gospels are not verbally accurate. But neither are his quotations from the Old Testament. He seems to have been familiar with the Psalms, probably from their use in worship, and usually quotes them correctly. All his long quotations are accurately given, probably because he unrolled his volume to find them; but not so his smaller quotations and incidental allusions. He ascribes in one place (Apol. I. 76) to Zephaniah a passage which is found in Zechariah, and to which he himself in another place gives the correct reference. He speaks of Moses feeding his uncle's flock (Apol. I. 95), and says that as the younger Israelites in the wilderness grew, so did their clothes grow with them (Dial. c. 131). In seventeen instances he has repeated the same quotation; and in more than half of them there is a striking want of correspondence, either in the words themselves or in their connection with other words quoted. When he thus deals with the Old Testament, and when he never even quotes his old master Plato verbatim,<sup>1</sup> it is unreasonable to expect that he would quote the Christian Books with a verbal carefulness which was unknown to his contemporaries, and foreign from the spirit of the age.

An examination of the passages which follow in the text will show the coincidences between Justin and each of the synoptists. Those from Matthew are most striking in the early history of Jesus, in which the Judæo-Christian Gospels of an apocryphal kind are deficient; the most striking correspondence with Mark is the reference to the bestowal of the name of Boanerges on the sons of Zebedee; the most interesting approach to St Luke is in the fact of the mission of the angel to Mary, and in the language narrating that fact. But there are many others. Opinions may differ as to those coincidences being quotations; but it seems to me that they are such quotations as we might expect if Justin had our Gospels in his hand. He seldom quotes without somewhat altering the language; and it has been observed that his variations from the original are usually in the direction of giving a more classical turn to the originally provincial Hellenistic phraseology. This was probably, in part, an unconscious change; in part also intentional, as commending the Gospel to those for whom he wrote.<sup>2</sup>

Memoirs," he probably describes Mark's Gospel, which early tradition connected with Peter. (See Dial. c. 106, and infra, p. 143. Cf. for the tradition, Tert. Cont. Marc. 4, 5, and Papias in Eus. III. 39.) He is referring to the change made by Jesus on Simon's name, and on those of the sons of Zebedee; and the only passage containing it is Mark iii. 17. This citation tells strongly against the conjecture that Justin used a harmony. (See before, p. liv, note 2.)

peculiar difficulties. The spiritual Gospel, written, as all tradition tells us, after the other three, is in its nature a supplement to them; and an adversary, whether Jew or Christian, was not likely to be affected in the first instance by arguments from it. Nevertheless, there are passages in Justin's writings so closely resembling John's Gospel as to command attention, and to justify those who regard them as proofs of Justin's acquaintance with the fourth Gospel. The most recent writers are again taking up this position, which, though occupied by Lardner and others, had been abandoned by writers of our own time a few years ago.

Take the curious disquisition on the Logos begotten by God in the beginning (Dial. c. 61) as the medium of revelation in all ages of history, who is not separated from the Father, and who is himself God.<sup>1</sup> Take the statements as to the new birth; as to the Word becoming flesh (Apol. c. 66); the living water, and the celestial habitation. With these it seems impossible to doubt that Justin gives us echoes of the fourth Gospel.

It seems idle to discuss whether Justin knew Paul's Epistles,—idle, because if Justin knew Marcion's work he knew Paul, and we have his own words to show that he had grasped the core of Marcion's speculations. We learn from others that he wrote a book against Marcion, now unfortunately lost. He knew also Valentinus's heresy; and the integrum instrumentum of that speculator, to which Tertullian testifies, must have been known to him. The references given in our text show incidental correspondence with Paul rather than quotation: show also reasoning from the same point of view, and this is all that we have reason to expect in the works of Justin which remain. Eusebius tells us that Justin's work on the "Sole Government of God" contained proofs from our Scriptures (ἐκ τῶν παρ' ἡμῶν γραφῶν), and this also is what we might expect. But to say that Justin did not know Paul's Epistles because he does not explicitly quote them in his Apologies and Dialogues, is based on the assumption that when Justin's primary purpose was to convince a contemporary heathen or Jew, he must also have had the secondary aim of showing how many books he knew, with a view to the critical controversies of the nineteenth century.

In conclusion, it seems as though the controversy about Justin's knowledge of our Gospels could not be much longer prolonged. Justin quotes memoirs written by Apostles and their companions; he calls them Gospels; his words are the words we find in our sacred books; he says they were used in public worship along with the prophets every Sunday; Trypho knew them; they are described as accessible to heathen; Justin's knowledge of Christian truth, whether fact or doctrine, is bounded by their contents, for the little apocryphal items are not worthy of being dwelt upon,—and if these things do not prove that Justin was a reader of our Evangelists, it is hard to say what would prove it.

But let us try to suppose that the opposite conclusion is adopted. The position, then, is that Justin used and Trypho read a Gospel which cannot be traced elsewhere or afterwards,—a Gospel different from that which his contemporary Marcion knew and mutilated: a set of books which so marvellously disappeared that Irenæus (who had possibly known Justin, and certainly wrote within 30 years of his death), when he descanted on the four winds, the four quarters of the world, and the four Gospels, knew nothing of them; and that Justin, when he quoted the apocryphal book or books, quoted so strangely that Eusebius, with all his love of gossip and all his historical lore, and many another besides him, never knew that the quotations were not from Matthew, Mark, Luke, John. That is to say, that the Memoirs to which Justin challenged the attention of the Roman emperor, senate, and people, and which were, therefore, well known, had so completely perished from the earth that Irenæus, who was familiar with the affairs of Asia, Rome, and Gaul, appealed to friend and foe to remark how marvellous is God's great providence in giving to Christendom and to humanity the four Gospels—the four, neither more nor less—of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

IX.—CLEMENTINE HOMILIES.

(See Text, pp. 438-444.)

THE apocryphal writing known as the Clementine Homilies is one of the most original and important of the many passing under the name of Clement. The name of Clement, as the voucher for the fictitious autobiography conveying to us the narrative and the discussions styled Homilies, gave early currency to the belief that they were the production of the Bishop of Rome. Accordingly, Sozomen in the fifth century, following Rufinus and Epiphanius earlier, speaks of Clement as the earliest of ecclesiastical historians. The work is rather an ecclesiastical romance with a doctrinal purpose, having St Peter and Simon Magus for its leading characters, and dealing freely with the facts of the Gospel and apostolical histories. It is written in the interests of Judæo-Christianity, and, in the opinion of most critics, belongs to the middle of the second century. There were other forms of this writing.<sup>1</sup>

The most important of these is the Clementine Recognitions. Whether the Homilies or the Recognitions are the earlier, is a question which has been much debated among critics.<sup>1</sup> The weight and variety of authorities are on the side of the Homilies.<sup>2</sup> The Recognitions, moreover, are extant only in the Latin translations of Rufinus; and as their quotations are more or less assimilated to the passages in the Gospels, they are in their present form of little value for the purposes of our inquiry. We shall confine ourselves accordingly to the examination of the Homilies. The value of this writing was partially apprehended by Mosheim, and more fully by Neander, but it owes its prominence as a controversial work to the use which Baur has made of it for his reconstruction of the early history of the Church.<sup>3</sup> Additional literary interest has attached to it since Dressel's discovery of a complete manuscript, with the help of which some questions relating to the use of the Gospels in the Homilies have been set at rest.

The value of the testimony of the Clementine Homilies to the use of the Gospels is somewhat lessened by our want of certainty as to the date of their composition. There are indications of some relationship between them and the writings of Justin Martyr. There is such an amount of similarity between the quotations in the Clementines and in Justin, that Credner investigates the two together, and finds the use of a Petri-Evangelium common to both.<sup>4</sup> However this may be, the phenomena of quotation generally are such as to support the view that the Homilies belong to the middle of the second century. What, then, are the Gospels used at that time, or about that time, within the circle to which the author belongs?

Matthew.—There cannot be a reasonable doubt as to the use of Matthew's Gospel. There are several quotations made from it, word for word, and the passages quoted are in several instances peculiar to Matthew—compare Hom. III. 52 with Mat. xi. 28; Hom. XIX. 7 with Mat. xii. 34; Hom. XIX. 2 with Mat. v. 37. But besides these exact quotations, there is a large number of quotations showing greater or less agreement with St Matthew's Gospel. There is one passage of special interest as evidence of this agreement. In Hom. XVIII. 15, Peter is made to quote against Simon Magus the substance of Ps. lxxviii. 2 (LXX., Ps. lxxvii. 2), assigning it, however, not to Asaph, as the LXX., but to Isaiah. Here are the words in the Homily: Καὶ τὸν Ἡσαΐαν εἰπεῖν ἀνοίξω τὸ στόμα μου ἐν παραβολαῖς καὶ ἐξερεύξομαι κεκ-

See, above all, Credner's Beiträge, p. 280, for an argument in favour of the priority of the Homilies, which Hilgenfeld in his 'Kritische Untersuchungen,' p. 325, does not overthrow, although he is followed by Ritschl, Volkmar, and Lipsius.

ρυσμένα ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. It is remarkable that Matthew has assigned the substance of this quotation to "the prophet,"—whether with or without Ἡσαίου is a point much discussed among textual critics. Here is the quotation in Matthew: Ὅπως πληρωθῇ τὸ ρηθὲν διὰ [Ἡσαίου] τοῦ προφήτου, λέγοντος· ἀνοίξω ἐν παραβολαῖς τὸ στόμα μου· ἐρεύξομαι κεκρυμμένα ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου (Mat. xiii. 35). In Matthew the Clementine writer may have found the reading with the false ascription, instances of which are not rare—e.g., Mark i. 2; Mat. xxvii. 9; Justin's Dial. c. 28. He certainly did not get his quotation directly from the LXX., else Ἡσαίαν would be inexplicable. Observe also that his peculiar word ἐξερεύξομαι corresponds mainly with Matthew's ἐρεύξομαι, not with LXX. φθέγξομαι; and his κεκρυμμένα ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου is literally Matthew's as against LXX., προβλήματα ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. Such striking resemblances, taken together, furnish evidence for the use of Matthew's Gospel not to be explained away. It is true that many of the passages given (see p. 438) bear only a partial resemblance to the corresponding passages in the Gospels. But when one considers the nature of the writing, one would not be surprised were there even fewer verbal coincidences. The work is a romance, in which the facts<sup>1</sup> of the Gospel history are freely handled, and in which the words of Jesus, as given by the evangelists, might readily be found mutilated and misquoted. Not to say that the writer certainly treats with much freedom quotations from the Old Testament, except when an argument turning upon a word, or reference to his authority in a long passage,<sup>2</sup> secures a greater approach to exactness,—one can account for difference in form amid substantial agreement by paraphrase in accordance with the plan of the work, or combination of similar passages, or quotations from memory. The discussion carried on by Peter and Simon Magus is so managed as to give occasion for quoting from memory or from hearsay. Deut. xxxiv. 5, quoted in Hom. III. 47, is an illustration of the Homilist's Old Testament references. The verbal variations and omissions point to the use of the Septuagint, and the character of the resemblances speaks for the Septuagint rather than the Hebrew. We may certainly affirm that the writer of the Homilies was accustomed to the use of Matthew's Gospel,—whether in its canonical form, or as the Gospel of the Hebrews, we need not meanwhile inquire. But it is needful to say in passing that the theory which assumes Justin Martyr and the author of the Homilies to have quoted the same non-canonical authority (whether it were the Gospel of the Hebrews, or the Ebionite Gospel, or the Gospel of Peter) cannot survive an actual comparison of the passages quoted by both. That comparison shows as great difference between the two as between Justin and the canonical writings.<sup>3</sup>

Luke.—The use of Luke's Gospel is also apparent, although the evidence comes more from allusions than from exact quotation. There are no quotations altogether verbatim. But Christ's prayer for His crucifiers (Hom. XI. 20); the emphatic repetition of the injunction to fear God, and the lesson of patient waiting for God's answer to prayer taught by the parable of the unjust judge (Hom. XVII. 5); the story of Zacchæus (Hom. III. 63); the fall of the wicked one as lightning (Hom. XIX. 2); names written in heaven (Hom. IX. 22),—are introduced with such directness as to point to the use of the third Gospel. When Hilgenfeld<sup>1</sup> says that the Clementine writer was perhaps acquainted with Luke's Gospel, he fails to do justice to the evidence.<sup>2</sup> We may with considerable confidence conclude, alike from the allusions themselves and from the Lucan character they bear when reproduced in the Homilies, that the use of Luke's Gospel is reasonably made out.

One feature of the Lucan references is the way in which they are mixed up with passages of Matthew's Gospel. See, for example, Hom. III. 56, where Mat. vii. 9-11 and Luke xi. 11-13 seem to be both in the Homilist's mind, and to be alternately drawn upon; Hom. XVII. 5, which combines Mat. x. 28 and Luke xii. 4, 5; and Hom. III. 60, where both Mat. xxiv. 45-51 and Luke xii. 42-45 are used. The phenomena of this double resemblance are such, according to Sanday,<sup>3</sup> as to exclude an earlier document underlying our synoptics, and employed by the Clementine writer. They seem to indicate either alternate quotations from Matthew and Luke, with occasional expansions or omissions, or the use of a harmony made at a later time.

Mark.—It is only since Dressel's discovery of the concluding portion of the Homilies in a Greek MS that the use of Mark has been definitely ascertained. There are in the earlier portions of the Homilies allusions to the Gospel history pointing with a measure of probability to the use of Mark. The reference to the Syrophœnician woman (Hom. II. 19) gives Σύρα Φοινίκισσα (Mark vii. 26); the summons, ἄκουε Ἰσραήλ, Κύριος ὁ Θεός σου Κύριος εἷς ἐστίν (Hom. III. 57), seems to be from Mark (xii. 29); and Mark xii. 27 (Mat. xxii. 32), οὐκ ἔστιν Θεὸς νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ ζώντων, is found exactly reproduced in Hom. III. 55. The decisive allusion is Hom. XIX. 20, where Mark iv. 34 is evidently in the eye of the Homilist. The Homilist says, διὸ καὶ τοῖς αὐτοῦ μαθηταῖς κατ' ἰδίαν ἐπέλνε τῆς τῶν οὐρανῶν βασιλείας τὰ μυστήρια, which exhibits striking agreement with Mark's κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ ἐπέλνε πάντα.

The verb ἐπιλύω is used only once again in the New Testament, Acts xix. 39, and the noun ἐπιλυσις appears in 2 Peter i. 20. It is difficult to explain away the force of this coincidence, and we may regard it as raising to the highest degree of probability what was probable in a lower degree before Dressel's discovery,—the use of our second Gospel by the Clementine writer.

John.—The discovery which has helped us to such a degree of certainty as regards the use of Mark, has largely increased the evidence for the use of John. The slight allusions to the necessity of regeneration (Hom. XI. 26), and to Christ's words, "I am the door of the sheep," "My sheep hear my voice" (Hom. III. 52), and the still more slight allusion to our Lord's language in John viii. 44 (Hom. III. 25), were, previous to Dressel's discovery, barely sufficient to raise the use of the fourth Gospel to the highest degree of probability. That evidence is now supplemented by a direct and striking allusion to the man blind from his birth (John ix. 1). The quotation of the disciple and the answer of Jesus are quoted (Hom. XIX. 22) with slight variation and expansion. The expression ἐκ γενετῆς is common to John and the Homilist; εἰ οὗτος ἡμαρτεν ἢ οἱ γονεῖς αὐτοῦ ἢ αὐτὸς τυφλὸς γεννηθῇ, corresponds to τίς ἡμαρτεν, οὗτος ἢ οἱ γονεῖς αὐτοῦ, ἢ αὐτὸς τυφλὸς γεννηθῇ of the Evangelist; and ἢ αὐτοῦ φανερωθῇ ἢ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς ἀγνοίας ἰωμένη τὰ ἁμαρτήματα is just such a variation of ἢ αὐτοῦ φανερωθῇ τὰ ἔργα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ as was required by the Homilist's argument as to sins of ignorance in the context. Taken in connection with slighter allusions, this allusion goes far to set the question of the use of John's Gospel by the Clementine writer finally at rest.

Apocryphal Gospel?—There are in the Clementine Homilies, as in Justin, sayings attributed to Christ, and not to be found in our Gospels (Hom. III. 50, 55; XIX. 20; and perhaps XII. 2). Credner<sup>1</sup> refers these sayings to an apocryphal Gospel, which he takes to be the Gospel of Peter. Hilgenfeld<sup>2</sup> thinks that Justin and the Clementine writer used one and the same apocryphal Gospel. Uhlhorn's<sup>3</sup> conclusion is, that the use of an uncanonical Gospel document is proved, and that the document is of a secondary character, probably from the stock of the Gospel of the Hebrews. We can only say, as we have said of the apocryphal allusions in Justin, that the Homilist may have got his supplementary sayings and details from oral tradition, or from those apocryphal Gospels which contained it. The character of the writing gave scope for the introduction of such traditional sayings of Jesus as might still be passing from mouth to mouth, and the time of its composition was in all probability the time when Christians were still partly dependent for acquaintance with the life and words of Jesus upon oral teaching, and not yet entirely dependent upon written narratives.

Acts of the Apostles.—The Homilist (Hom. III. 53) puts into the mouth of Jesus a claim to be the personal fulfilment of Deut. xviii. 15,—a claim which Peter makes for Him, Acts iii. 22, and Stephen, Acts vii. 37. It is doubtful whether this can be taken as a reference to the book of Acts at all. It may be (as Credner suggests) based upon John v. 46.

Paul's Epistles.—There are two passages in which there are apparent allusions to Pauline Epistles,—Hom. XIX. 22 pointing to Gal. iv. 10; Hom. XIX. 2 pointing to Eph. iv. 27. But the allusions are so indefinite as not to disturb the received opinion that the Clementine Homilies contain no references whatever to the Pauline Epistles. Indeed, the nature of the writing is such as to exclude them. The writer is a Judæo-Christian opposed to Paul; and Simon Magus, whom he introduces as Peter's opponent, is the Apostle of the Gentiles in disguise.

X.—GOSPEL OF THE HEBREWS.

Among the many problems of which we can only find a provisional or probable solution, that of the Gospel of the Hebrews is undoubtedly one. Of late years, critics of the negative school have raised this book to a position of primary importance, as the fountain from which all our Gospels flow. Hilgenfeld calls it the Archimedes-point which scholars so long sought in the Gospel of Mark.<sup>1</sup> But before we can so honour it, we should need to know more about its characteristics and its history. Its structure is a hypothesis, and any theory as to its origin very nearly the same.

The facts on which we have to exercise judgment are not many. Complications arise from the apparent inconsistency of Jerome's statements with one another, and from the discrepancies between what is quoted by him and what is quoted by Epiphanius as the account of the Baptism in the Hebrew Gospel.<sup>2</sup>

It is, however, an admitted fact that several books more or less akin to St Matthew's Gospel—or one book resembling that Gospel—circulated largely among several sects of Jewish Christians in the early centuries. How early those books (or that book) existed, and how much change the copies underwent in the course of years, are matters of dispute. It is easy to show that at the time when we hear most of them by name, those books or copies did not agree with each other, and that each one contained support for the special views of the sect that used it. (See below on the Gospels of the Nazarenes, Ebionites, and Egyptians. See in the text a note on the Gospel of Peter, which may have been another recension of it.)

It is impossible to sketch even the outlines of the problem without taking a hasty view of the sects among which the "Gospel of the Hebrews" was found. The chief of these were the Nazarenes and the Ebionites. A few words will indicate their characteristics.

The Nazarenes diverged least in doctrine from the ordinary catholic type, of which Hegesippus speaks so strongly.<sup>1</sup> The name was originally applied by the Jews to all Christians. Whatever the origin of the word Nazarene,<sup>2</sup>—whatever the difference in meaning between Nazarene and Nazarite, Nazirite and Nazorite, in early usage,—we may accept as a fact that a sect of Christians did claim from an early date down to the fifth century to be followers of Christ in special affinity with "James the Just," of whose character and death Eusebius has preserved from Hegesippus so graphic an account.<sup>3</sup> This very claim of theirs intimates that, like James, they were consecrated to follow Jesus as the Messiah; and, like James, combined Christianity with observance of many of the practices of Judaism. James, with all his reverence for Judaism, was essentially a Christian, and for his avowal of his Christian faith lost his life. The Nazarenes, in short, were Hebrew Christians, with strong abiding national peculiarities of faith and ritual. They were chiefly found by the banks of the Jordan, in Gilead and Bashan, and northwards towards Syria. They were not "heretics;" and there is no proof that they rejected all the New Testament save a Gospel of their own.<sup>4</sup> They did not reject St Paul as an apostate, and in this they differed from most of the Jewish sects.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, while they clung to many points of Judaism, they do not seem to have sought to impose the doctrine or practice of the Law on other Christians.

The Ebionites originally were the Jewish Christians. As time went on they became a sect, and, as Jerome says, were half Jew, half Christian. Some say they were called after a founder, Ebion; others that their name means "poor," and that they were the descendants of the impoverished Church of Jerusalem; others that they bore the name of "The Poor Men," because their intellect or their views were low (Eus. H. E. III. 27). That the name was originally given to all Jewish Christians is seen in Eus. Onomasticon, sub voce χωβά, where we read "χωβά . . . ἐν ᾗ εἰσὶν Ἑβραῖοι οἱ εἰς Χριστὸν πιστεύσαντες Ἑβριωνᾶοι καλούμενοι." (See Lipsius, Zur Quellen-Kritik des Epiphanius, p. 123.) They recognised Christ as the Messiah, but refused to own His divinity; they rejected St Paul as an apostate; and they clung to what they called the Gospel of the Hebrews. The earlier Ebionites regarded Christ as a mere man; the later introduced the Gnostic idea of an Æon coming down on Jesus at His baptism. The Ebionitism of which we read in the earlier Fathers, as Irenæus and Hippolytus, was of the first or Pharisaic form; that of which Epiphanius tells is the second or Essenic form.<sup>1</sup> Their headquarters were by the banks of the Jordan.

<sup>5</sup> The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, which is supposed to be an utterance of this sect, contains under the head of "Benjamin" a prediction of St Paul, as one "who is to arise beloved of the Lord, listening to His voice, enlightening all the Gentiles with new knowledge." See text, p. 446.

It would be absurd to suppose that all of them were of one type, but they were substantially as described above.

Both Nazarenes and Ebionites used the Gospel of the Hebrews. There can be no surprise in finding that this book resembled St Matthew more than the other canonical Gospels. St Matthew's Gospel in its whole structure, and especially in its avowed relation to Old Testament prophecy and Old Testament types, was intended primarily for Hebrew Christians. There is, moreover, a widespread tradition in the Church, to which many Fathers bear witness, that Matthew's book was originally written in Hebrew.<sup>2</sup> It is a natural supposition that the sects of Hebrew Christians would preserve the original text of Matthew's Gospel in their native tongue. The book, however, as they had it, is lost—we may say, hopelessly lost; and we have only citations from it, and descriptions of it by the early Fathers, to depend upon. Clement of Alexandria and Origen, and above all Jerome, expressly quote from it.<sup>3</sup> Nay, Jerome, famous for his industry and his learning, says, "There is a Gospel which the Nazarenes and Ebionites use, which I lately translated from the Hebrew tongue into Greek, and which is called by many the authentic Gospel of Matthew" (Comment. in Mat. xii. 3<sup>4</sup>). From this there can be no doubt that it was a book which differed so considerably from our canonical book as to need translation, and to awaken controversy whether its form was the original one.

In another passage (written A.D. 392) he says : " Matthew, called also Levi, who from a publican became an Apostle, first of all composed the Gospel of Christ in Hebrew letters and words, in Judaea, for behoof of those of the circumcision who had believed ; and it is not quite certain who afterwards translated it into Greek. But the very Hebrew is preserved to this day, in the Casarean Library, which Pamphilus the martyr with such care collected. I myself also was allowed the opportunity of copying it [seeing and examining it?] by the Nazarenes in Bercea, who use this volume. In which it is to be observed that throughout the Evangelist, when he uses the testimonies of the Old Testament, either in his own person or in that of the Lord and Saviour, does not follow the authority of the LXX. translators, but the Hebrew. Of those the following are two examples : ' Out of Egypt have I called my Son '—ii. 15 ; and, ' Since He shall be called a Nazarene '—iii. 23."<sup>1</sup>

That this is another book from that of which we have read in the passage formerly quoted, is clear. The other he translated ; this one he has seen and examined (for this is all we are entitled to make of " facultas describendi fuit "). The other was a competitor with our St Matthew for the honour of being the original ; this one is our St Matthew itself in its primary form in Hebrew. The former he had thought it worth while to translate ; in the case of this one, he only needed to compare it with our canonical book, so as to see that the quotations which it makes from the Old Testament are from the original Old Testament Hebrew, and do not correspond with the Greek of the LXX.

All this seems clear enough. But unfortunately Jerome is not always so distinct ; and it appears that in his old age he virtually, if not explicitly, retracted the somewhat hasty opinion he had given, that the book which the Nazarenes in Bercea used, and which was identical with the original in Casarea, was the very Gospel of Matthew in Hebrew. Born A.D. 331, he died A.D. 420, at the age of 91, studying and writing almost to the last, Hebrew being the study of his old age. It was in A.D. 392 that he said the Nazarenes of Bercea had the genuine original ; in later times, A.D. 410 to A.D. 415, he is more indefinite ; and his last utterance on the subject, four or five years before his death, is founded upon as a virtual retraction.<sup>2</sup> His words are : " In the Gospel according to the Hebrews, which was written indeed in the Chaldee-Syriac language, but in Hebrew characters, which the Nazarenes use as the Gospel according to the Apostles, or as the majority think according to Matthew, which also is contained in the Library at Casarea, the narrative says," &c. He quotes from it some passages which are not in our canonical Gospel. He also says, " That Gospel which is called the Gospel of the Hebrews, which was lately translated by me into Greek and Latin, and was used frequently by Origen."

There can be no doubt that difficulty arises from the fact that the book which Jerome believed to be the very original of our St Matthew was used by the Nazarenes in Berœa: while he speaks elsewhere as though the other book (differing so much from our St Matthew that he translated it) was used by all the Nazarenes, as well as by the Ebionites, —in short, that it was distinctive of those sects to use it. And it is possible that, in his mature judgment, he meant to intimate that the book which the Nazarenes used was not the original Matthew. But we must remember, on the other hand, that the Nazarenes did not all necessarily use the same book. Those of Berœa<sup>1</sup> may, like their Macedonian namesakes, have been honourably distinguished for inquiring into Scripture, and so have retained a genuine copy, while the Nazarenes further south by the banks of the Jordan may have had only an adulterated one. And if we suppose that the Nazarenes did not all use the same book, though all of them used a version of St Matthew more or less like that we have, and written in Hebrew, or in a language which may be popularly described as Hebrew, Jerome is not inconsistent with himself in this part of the subject.

This supposition seems to meet the difficulties of the case so far.

To pursue the inquiry further would lead us into more remote questions as to the original language of our canonical St Matthew. It seems enough to say that the original existence of that book in Hebrew, its translation into Greek by some one unknown, and the ultimate disappearance of the genuine original, are all possible enough separately or together, and are really quite distinct from the matter of fact as to what we learn of the composition of the Gospel of the Hebrews when we first find it in trustworthy quotations. What we thus learn enables us to see clearly that no critical Archimedes can find a firm fulcrum in so shifting a substance. It rushes to and fro like quicksilver. For, when we turn to the book which Nazarenes and Ebionites are supposed to have used, we find that the Nazarene form cannot have been the same as the Ebionite. When we try to lay hold of the book which Jerome translated—as generally used by the Nazarenes—we find (as we might expect) that its narratives are not identical with those of our canonical Gospel, and that its form does not seem to be the original which the other corrupts. When, therefore, Jerome tells us that Nazarenes and Ebionites used that book, and that many thought it the genuine St Matthew, he says what we cannot accept as a literally accurate statement.

When we turn to the quotations in other Fathers—quotations probably containing the more notable and quotable portions—we find them for the most part of small doctrinal importance, and not adding much to our knowledge of facts, but nevertheless interesting, and quite unlike the useless dilutions of the “Apocryphal Gospels.”

The words, "I am not a bodiless phantom," ascribed to our Lord, are not very different from those in the New Testament. These others, "He that hath wondered shall rule, and he that hath ruled shall have rest," contain Christian philosophy in Gnostic phrase. And others might be similarly used as illustrations.

We have ordinary traditional variation in the rich man "scratching his head;"<sup>1</sup> we have also an interesting traditional application of our Lord's words, when the rich man in the narrative already alluded to is asked how he can be said to love his neighbour—for while his house is full of good things, nothing goes out from it to relieve the squalor and the hunger and the poverty among the children of Abraham around his door.

But we have distinct doctrinal purpose, obviously of a Gnostic type, in a number of other passages peculiar to this Gospel. We read that the reply of Jesus to His mother and brethren, when they pressed Him to go with them to be baptised of John unto the remission of sins, was, "What sin have I done that I should go and be baptised of Him? Unless it be that this very thing which I have said is ignorance." In this we have an obvious attempt to account for our Lord accepting baptism at the hands of His forerunner without applying the simpler and grander teaching of the canonical narrative, that "thus it became Him to fulfil all righteousness." We see the same Gnostic tendencies at work in the sequel of the Nazarene narrative of the baptism: "When the Lord had gone up out of the water, the whole fountain of the Holy Spirit descended upon Him, and rested on Him, and said to Him, 'My Son, in all the prophets I waited for Thy coming, that I might rest in Thee: for Thou art my rest: Thou art my first-born Son, who reignest for ever.'" This must be taken in connection with the passages in which the Holy Spirit is called the Mother of Jesus,—passages which startled both Origen and Jerome in their day; and, as we have seen in the notes to our text, led on from the early heresies of the Gnostics into the Mariolatry of the later Christian Church.

We have on the other hand an interesting addition to the Canonical narrative, and a probable explanation of a passage of St Paul, when we find in this Gospel the story of our Lord's appearance to James the Just after His resurrection.

It is scarcely possible that any one who reads the passages preserved from this long-lost Gospel will believe that they are an earlier form of sacred narrative than the canonical St Matthew. They have every mark of being a gradually altered recension of the original work which is in the New Testament.

<sup>1</sup> Also in the man with a withered hand saying that he was a mason; and in the statement that a lintel of prodigious size fell in, instead of the canonical narrative that the veil of the temple was rent; and in the well-known addition to the narrative of the baptism, that fire blazed on the Jordan.

The Ebionite Gospel.

As we have seen, Jerome seems to have thought that the Nazarenes and Ebionites used the same book. His quotations are from the Nazarene form. Epiphanius, not nearly so trustworthy in matters of opinion, but worthy of credit in such matters of fact as long verbal quotations, uses the Ebionite form. We have, therefore, no means of comparing the two sets of quotations, save where they chance to describe the same event. The one being in Latin and the other in Greek, verbal correspondence is scarcely ascertainable; but still we are able to see that, in such a case as the narrative of the baptism of Jesus, the two books cannot have been the same. I have already quoted the Nazarene narrative, and it is enough here to refer for comparison to the long Ebionite extract at p. 457 of our text. The variations are not greater than those found in different manuscripts of such apocryphal books as the Gospel of the Infancy, but they are inconsistent with the theory that we now possess (or can be sure that any one ever possessed) in the Gospel of the Hebrews the original record of the life of Jesus Christ.

In the text will be found a remarkable passage from Epiphanius, intimating that the Gospel used by the Ebionites professed to be written by the twelve apostles in a body, although the names of only eight are given.

Without further detail we may say that the passages from Epiphanius, if they are accepted, are to the effect that—

1. Matthew's Gospel was in use among the Ebionites,<sup>1</sup> but mutilated by the excision of the genealogies, and of the first two chapters as a whole.<sup>2</sup>

2. The Ebionites said that Jesus Christ was not God's Son, but as one of the Archangels, though the chief of them. They supposed that "Christ" came at baptism upon the man Jesus: and they believed Him a Saviour, to be not mere man, but to have had no father or mother or brethren, in the ordinary sense. They quoted, "These are my brethren, and my mother, who do the will of my Father."

3. Although Jews, they ceased to offer sacrifice;<sup>3</sup> they practised circumcision as being from the patriarchs, and as being sanctioned by Christ's example.

<sup>3</sup> In support of this they quoted as words of Jesus, "I came to abolish sacrifices; and if ye do not cease to sacrifice, wrath will not cease from you."

Conclusions as to the Gospel of the Hebrews.

In conclusion, we have had ample proof that some book, professing to be a consecutive account of our Lord's life, was widely circulated among the Jewish Christians, and that this book resembled the canonical St Matthew. We find that it had various names,—that it was the Gospel of the Hebrews, the Nazarene Gospel, the Ebionite Gospel, when described by the name of those who used it; that it was the Gospel of the Twelve, the original St Matthew, when its name was drawn from something in itself.

If we are asked where we have the original form of this book, in the few cases where we can compare different quotations, we must answer that we cannot tell. Its various forms differ considerably from each other, but we have not the means of deciding as to its earliest form. When we have sects so like and yet so unlike as were the Nazarenes and the Ebionites, we might expect that they would adopt the same book at first, and afterwards (probably gradually) modify it to suit themselves. The Ebionite alterations are mainly dogmatical or doctrinal; the Nazarene are chiefly, though not entirely, traditional supplements to the canonical narratives.

We have already found reason to accept the substantial accuracy of Jerome's words, and have come to the conclusion that the book for which describendi facultas was granted to him by the Nazarenes of Beroëa was not the same as that which he translated;—that the former was our St Matthew in Hebrew; that the latter was St Matthew, adulterated during successive generations. We believe it to be probable that the Beroëan book was only used by a portion of the sect of the Nazarenes, and the other by the Nazarenes and the Ebionites as a whole.

Whether Jerome was right in supposing that the book he saw in Beroëa was a Hebrew form of St Matthew, and that the book in the Cæsarean Library was another of the same, there can be no good reason for doubting that he who spent his learned old age in Bethlehem knew very well whether the book he translated was substantially the Gospel used by the Nazarenes and the Ebionites in his neighbourhood. There is no reason, from anything that he has said, to regard that book as a serious competitor for the honour of priority with our canonical Gospel.

But a word may now be said here as to its relation to the original form of St Matthew. The conclusion to which I at present incline is only given as the most probable, not as certain. Without entering on the vexed question of the original language of St Matthew, I must say that the current of antiquity runs strongly in favour of its having been Hebrew. But if this were proved to be a mistake of the ancients,<sup>1</sup> the book itself would show that it was at least written for the Hebrews; and therefore we must believe that a Hebrew translation of the Gospel was made at a very early period for the benefit of those who were ignorant of the original Greek, or whose national susceptibilities led them to prefer their national tongue. In any case, we conclude that there was almost at the first a Hebrew form of St Matthew's Gospel. This was naturally the book favoured by Jewish Christians, whether orthodox or heretical; and this, therefore, became the standard of the Nazarenes and the Ebionites. The former, though cherishing it as specially their own, nevertheless gradually introduced into it, perhaps from the margin, such supplementary traditions as that the man whose hand was withered had been a mason. The latter, gradually drawing more apart from other communities, whether Jewish or Christian, continued to adapt their Gospel to their changing tenets, introducing such sayings as that which abolished sacrifice, or such narratives as that which gave the sanction of the Lord and all His apostles to their book.

THE GOSPEL OF THE EGYPTIANS (see p. 468)

was full of parables, allegories, and mysticism, and may be here mentioned because of the agreement of its views with those of another Hebrew sect or organisation, the Essenes. Its title denotes that it was current among the Egyptians, and its mystic teachings confirm the claim of the title. It is not mentioned by Eusebius in his Ecl. Hist., nor is it in the decree of Gelasius. It is mentioned by Origen.<sup>1</sup> It is used also by the author of the so-called "Second Epistle of Clement," and by Clement of Alexandria, but in his case so as to distinguish it from the four Gospels handed down to us.

It is written with the manifest aim of maintaining the merit of celibacy, and of showing the evils wrought in the world by the female sex. In this respect the book corresponds to the tenets of the Essenes; and if there were Essenic Christians with a special "Gospel," this book would exactly meet their case. There is difficulty, however, in connecting the Essenes with the locality of Egypt. It is probable that they adopted some of the philosophy of Egyptian Judaism (see Geikie's 'Life of Christ,' i. 363), but their views of the material universe, and their central doctrines generally, were Zoroastrian (Lightfoot, Colossians, p. 149), and as an organisation they were found by the shores of the Dead Sea. They are not likely to have had local connection with the "Gospel of the Egyptians." Eusebius (H. E. II. 17) identifies the Therapeutæ of Egypt with early Christians, but his argument (which is a commentary upon Philo De Vit. Contempl.) is not now generally accepted. Many writers, founding on Philo and Josephus (Bell. Jud. II. 8), identify the Essenes with Christian monks originating in Egypt. This opinion also is not now accepted; but is still not unworthy of consideration. About the Essenes there is little certain. They were originally Jews; and though many of them became Christians after the fall of Jerusalem, they would by so doing cease to be Essenes. That such men would relish, perhaps fabricate, the mystic Gospel is highly probable. But we cannot go further. We may say that the tendency to asceticism which originated the Therapeutæ in Egypt, and the Essenes in Syria, acted upon Christendom also;<sup>1</sup> and that it was to be expected that Egypt, the cradle of Christian monasticism, should give a name to the new "Gospel."

XI.—HEGESIPPUS.

LIGHTFOOT's essay on the silence of Eusebius ('Contemporary Review,' 1875, p. 169) is one of the most important contributions to historical criticism which have been made in our generation. In the case of Hegesippus it has special value, and enables us to understand clearly what formerly was not only obscure but inconsistent with itself. Eusebius, from whom we have almost all we know of him, says that he quoted from the Gospel according to the Hebrews; and yet in the pages of Eusebius himself are indirect proofs that his quotations were not limited to it. This seemed contradictory, and certainly led many critics into contradictions of fact. But we now learn from Lightfoot's careful and conclusive induction that Eusebius only laid himself out to record or refer to the quotations of ancient authors when the book from which they quoted was one in dispute, and that his silence upon the subject of citations from a particular book is an indication that the book was not disputed. When therefore the author of 'Supernatural Religion' says of Eus. H. E. IV. 22, that "Eusebius shows that he has sought, and here details, all the sources from which Hegesippus quotes, or regarding which he expresses opinions,"<sup>2</sup> the statement is the reverse of fact, though not unnatural up to the time of Lightfoot's remarkable essay. That the ancient historian enriched his pages with passages from the Gospel of the Hebrews and from unwritten Jewish tradition, is quite compatible with his habitually using the canonical books.

define; and although his testimony is neither full nor explicit, it is quite in accordance with what we have learned from other witnesses. He was in Rome some time between A.D. 157 and A.D. 168, and his history did not leave his hands until after A.D. 177.<sup>1</sup> He was renowned as a champion of Christianity against its assailants,—to be counted indeed among the foremost, as Eusebius tells us, after a most eloquent chapter on the triumphs of the Gospel over heathenism and heresy and false philosophy.<sup>2</sup> Among his writings was a faithful history of the apostolic teaching (ἀπλανῇ παράδοσιν τοῦ ἀποστολικοῦ κηρύγματος), unfortunately lost, save that some fragments are preserved by Eusebius. He travelled in many lands, had intercourse with many bishops, and found everywhere the same doctrine in the Church of Christ—a doctrine proclaimed by “the law and the prophets and the Lord.”<sup>3</sup> He stayed for some time at Corinth; and there is significance in his avowal that the Church of Corinth continued in the true faith, and that he and the Church in that place were refreshed with each other’s sound doctrine. It is strange that any one can write of this Hegesippus as holding only by Hebrew Scriptures and Hebræo-Christian Gospels, when his own distinct statement is that the one doctrine which he found everywhere was specially refreshing to him in the Church of Corinth, which is well known to have been so Pauline. It is not correct to say that Eusebius says, “The Gospel which he used in his writings was that ‘according to the Hebrews;’”<sup>4</sup> because Eusebius only says that in his many writings this ancient historian took certain things (τινὰ τίθησιν) from the Hebrew and Syriac Gospel (or Gospels), and from Hebrew tradition, as it was natural for one born a Jew to do.<sup>5</sup> And it is worthy of notice, also, that he was no indiscriminate admirer of extra-canonical books, for he took pains to decide upon the claims of the apocryphal writings, and records his conclusion that some of them were forged in his own time by heretics.

<sup>1</sup> He says he was in Rome while Anicetus was bishop; and he intimates that Eleutheros was bishop when he closes his record. Anicetus succeeded in A.D. 157, and Eleutheros in A.D. 177. The Alexandrian Chronicle says he died in the time of Commodus (who began to reign A.D. 192).

<sup>2</sup> Eusebius (H. E. IV. 7, 8, and again IV. 22) names him in the same list with Dionysius of Corinth and Irenæus, as the chief of those to whom we owe it that the orthodoxy of the sound faith which comes from the Apostles has been transmitted in writing (“ὧν καὶ εἰς ἡμᾶς τῆς ἀποστολικῆς παραδόσεως ἡ τῆς ὑγιоῦς πίστεως ἐγγράφος κατήλθεν ὀρθοδοξία”).

The passages in which the fragments of Hegesippus's writings suggest canonical books will be found in our text. We need only say here that he alludes to Herod's terror at Christ's birth, which is found in Mat. ii., and (as we learn from Epiphanius, Hær. 30, 13) this chapter of Matthew was one of those omitted in the Gospel of the Hebrews. In his memorable description of the death of the strange ascetic, James the Just (Eus. H. E. II. 23), we find an echo of Mat. xxvi. 64,<sup>1</sup> when he speaks of the Son of man on the right hand of the mighty power, and about to come on the clouds of heaven. We find the very words of our Lord's prayer on the cross (Luke xxiii. 34) in the last cry of James, "Father, forgive them (ἄφες αὐτοῖς), for they know not what they do." If later chroniclers report him rightly, he objects to Gnostic renderings of "Eye hath not seen," &c., and cites the words of our Lord, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see," &c. (Mat. xiii. 16; Luke x. 23); and not only so, but refers to our Gospels as θεῖαι γραφαί.<sup>2</sup>

It may even be that he alludes to John's Gospel, when, in his account of James's death, he says the crowd asked the saint what is the door of Jesus.<sup>3</sup> He seems to allude to Luke xix. 11 when recording Domitian's inquiry regarding Christ's kingdom; and to 2 Tim. iv. 1 when he gives the answer that Christ would come in glory to judge the quick and the dead, and render unto every man according to his works.<sup>4</sup> He weaves the words of the pastoral epistles into his narrative when speaking of the way in which heretics dared to hold up their heads after the Apostles passed away. See Eus. H. E. III. 32.<sup>5</sup>

XII.—MURATORIAN CANON.

MURATORI, in the third vol. of 'Antiquitates Italicae Medii ævi' (1740), published a MS, at that time in the Ambrosian Library in Milan, formerly in the monastery of Bobbio. His object was to show that some men employed in old times to copy MSS were singularly unlearned and unskilled; but he was also aware that the MS was valuable because of its connection with the canon of the New Testament. The MS contained various fragments. It seems to have been the common-

<sup>5</sup> It is not certain that Eusebius uses the very words of Hegesippus, but we may suppose that the statement is reported pretty much as he made it.

place-book of a monk, apparently of the eighth century. Muratori's own conjecture (generally approved by subsequent writers) was, "cujus antiquitas pæne ad annos mille accedere mihi visa est."<sup>1</sup>

Amongst other things in the MS was a fragment on the canon beginning in the middle of a sentence, and breaking off abruptly. From the reference to Hermas as "having written the 'Shepherd' very recently and in our own times, while Pius, his brother, was bishop of Rome," Muratori supposed Caius, a well-known presbyter of Rome, to be the author of this fragment on the canon, and fixed the date at A.D. 196. As regards the date, this is a mistake, for Pius died about the middle of the second century. If the words "very recently and in our own times" be true, and have their natural meaning, the date of the original of the fragment is probably A.D. 160 or 170. Internal evidence seems on the whole to confirm this conclusion. There is nothing to identify the author. But the testimony is valuable as being early. It is evidently a very illiterate transcript, and the transcriber appears to have had before him a badly done translation of a Greek account of the canon.<sup>2</sup> The conjectures and controversies of scholars may be summed up in the words of Tregelles, whose careful edition is the basis of the text in this work: "Its evidence is not the less trustworthy from its being a blundering and illiterate transcript of a rough and rustic translation of a Greek original."<sup>3</sup>

But while admitting this, we may be permitted to wonder at the unanimity with which so many scholars of all shades of opinion accept this anonymous fragment as genuine, though there is little warrant for its date save its own claim, and everything about it is so incomplete.<sup>4</sup> It seems to be compiled from dislocated pieces; at all events, the connection between the sentences is often obscure. The only use which can be safely made of its testimony regarding some disputed point is of a general kind. Those who hunt for minute details in it have to read them into it, and then, by dint of corrections, they find them in the adjusted text (see on this Reuss, Gesch., § 310). It testifies be-

yond all doubt to two Gospels, and, by fair inference, we get its testimony to the other two. It testifies also to thirteen epistles of St Paul; to the Acts of the Apostles as Luke's; to at least two epistles (perhaps three) of John; and to Jude's epistle, and to the Apocalypse of John.<sup>1</sup> The epistles of James and Peter are not mentioned, and there is no certain reference to Hebrews.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, a "Book of Wisdom" is named with acceptance in a perplexing way; and an Apocalypse of Peter is accepted by the author, though (like John's) not approved of by all for reading in church. Two forged epistles (to Laodiceans and Alexandrians) are named only to be denounced. Hermas is admitted to private, but not to public, use. Others of the many claimants to recognition in the early Church are named, or obscurely alluded to.<sup>3</sup>

On the whole, we must regard this famous fragment as an unsatisfactory document. If the original be discovered some day, and in its light the multifarious literature of the subject be read, we shall probably have an even more amusing proof of the futility of conjectures than is furnished by the recent publication of the lost parts of the "Epistles of Clement."

XIII.—CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

TITUS FLAVIUS CLEMENS, by birth an Athenian or Alexandrian, originally a pagan,—a man who saw many lands and studied many subjects,—succeeded Pantænus as head of the catechetical school of Alexandria about A.D. 189, and died about thirty years later. He was the teacher of Origen, probably of Hippolytus. His ecclesiastical rank was that of presbyter. Three of his works which remain are a series—(1) An

Exhortation to the Heathen ; (2) The Instructor (παδαγωγός), being an Exposition of Christ's Character and Precepts, for the benefit of those who have been converted to Christianity ; (3) στρώματα or στρωματεῖς (Miscellanies), a collection of notes on the higher Christian γνώσις, intended to delineate the perfect Christian. There is also a small tract, "Who is the rich man that shall be saved?" He divided the Christian books into "the Gospel" and "the Apostle,"—a division which Origen, after him, adopted. He acknowledged four Gospels, fourteen of St Paul (Philemon, indeed, is not quoted). He ascribes the Acts to Luke ; quotes 1 and 2 John, 1 Peter, Jude, and the Apocalypse. Of James, 2 Peter, and 3 John we have no recognition. He ascribes Hebrews to Paul, and the Apocalypse to John.

His views of extra-canonical books are the chief difficulty. He uses ecclesiastical writings, especially Barnabas, Clement of Rome, and Hermas ; also apocryphal books, such as the Preaching of Peter (much used by Valentinus, Marcion, and Basilides), the Sibylline Oracles, the Revelation of Peter, the Traditions of Matthias, and the Gospel according to the Egyptians. Sometimes he seems to regard them as historical authorities ; sometimes he quotes them by way of illustration, sometimes (Sibylline Oracles) as divinely inspired, and as prophecy. In trying to understand his position, we have to remember that he was, and gloried in being, an eclectic in everything. He was a Christian littérateur rather than a theologian, a metaphysician rather than a logician. When he quotes books he is not thereby asserting their canonicity. It was one of his accusations against heretics that they did not obey the Divine Scriptures, and kicked off the tradition of the Church. There is no proof that he regarded the book called "Peter's Preaching" as Peter's own composition ; and though he quotes the Gospel of the Egyptians, he does not own it as Scripture, or even as authentic. The Sibylline Oracles he did indeed over-estimate, and this is a peculiarity of Clement wherein he did not agree with the general testimony of the Church.<sup>1</sup> The apocryphal books were for the most part written in his own Greek tongue, and were launched in the society amid which his busy life was spent, so that it is easy to understand how different was his estimate of them from that which Tertullian found in the Latin Church, outside of all the movement which they represented.

Clement's view of γνώσις, as acquaintance with the higher meaning of Scripture, claims also notice here. He believed that "a true tradition of the blessed doctrine" was imparted by Christ to the chief Apostles, and by them handed down to their successors in the Church; and he claimed to have received it through Pantænus. This γνώσις led to much mysticism, but it also, in Clement's case, was the core of excellent exposition of faith and virtue. It was not contrary to Scripture, not even supplementary to it, but a key to it. "They who are labouring after excellence will not stop in their search for truth until they receive proof from the Scriptures themselves." His rule of faith is the agreement of the Church, the apostles, and prophets. But he appeals less to the objective authority of tradition than Tertullian and Irenæus. His view was, that the Apostles possessed completely what other believers receive partially. He still built all upon Scripture, the wise master-builder being the instructed (Gnostic) Christian teacher. In our text (from Eus. H. E. VI. 14,—see below under "Gospels") he speaks of the four Gospels as standing by themselves. And whatever his δηγγήσεις were to which Eusebius (H. E. VI. 14) refers, the only non-canonical books to which they were attached are Barnabas and the Apocalypse of Peter. He wrote on all the ἀντιλεγόμεναι γραφαί, but (as Lardner says) so did Le Clerc.

XIV.—ORIGEN.

ORIGEN, born A.D. 184, was the "father of Biblical Criticism." He was from his childhood devoted to the study of the Scriptures; and, under much privation—partly brought on him by others, and partly self-caused—he kept the one end before him, with such success that he stands by himself as the greatest and most laborious critic of antiquity. His achievements and his methods of working have powerful influence even to the present day.<sup>1</sup> He was a pupil of Clement, and was head of the catechetical school of Alexandria from the time he was eighteen years of age until he was upwards of forty; thereafter he lived in Cæsarea. He was not always stationary, but at various times made journeys to Athens, Arabia, &c., teaching doctrine and criticism. On one of his journeys he was ordained presbyter in Cæsarea, and (probably on that account) lost the favour of the bishop of Alexandria, by whose council he was deprived of his post as teacher, and of his rank as presbyter.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> It might be alleged that his ordination gave just offence,—first, because he belonged to another diocese; and second, because he had (in unhappy misinterpretation of a saying of our Lord's) mutilated himself. His works, already published, might expose him to the charge of heresy. Jealousy, however, seems to have had much to do with

But although he was accused of heresy by his enemies, the Churches of Palestine, Arabia, and Achaia retained their reverence for him. He suffered great hardships in the Decian persecution (A.D. 250), and died in Tyre about A.D. 253.

He wrote on every book of Scripture—notes, commentaries, or homilies,—5000 volumes in all, say some; more than any other man can read, says Jerome, not unnaturally.<sup>1</sup> Most of his works are lost. Some of them survive in an unsatisfactory Latin translation by Rufinus, or in renderings by Jerome; but his great work against Celsus is complete, and is a memorable record of an early struggle between the assailant and the defender of Christianity. They were well matched in ability—Celsus excelling in general information, while Origen was a master of criticism. The extracts given in the following pages give a fair idea of the chief points of the controversy.<sup>2</sup> The most laborious of all his undertakings was his collation of the versions of the Old Testament, known as his Hexapla and Tetrapla. A work with parallel columns in such elaborate fashion was not likely to be multiplied, and it has been lost, except some fragments.

On the whole, we find from Eusebius's elaborate statement that Origen received the four Gospels, the Acts, 13 Epp. of Paul, and Hebrews (whether Paul's or not), 1 Peter, 1 John, and the Apocalypse (which he regarded as the writing of John the Apostle). While his opinions are thus far certain, there is doubt as to the other books. James and Jude are not mentioned at all; and 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John are mentioned, but said to be of disputed genuineness. If, however, we accept the translations of his Homilies on Genesis and Joshua, we find that, when speaking popularly, he treated James and Jude as integral parts of the New Testament; that 2 Peter and "the epistles" of John occupy the same rank; and that he ascribed fourteen epistles to St Paul.<sup>3</sup>

There is a passage in one of Origen's Commentaries in which he seems to make a threefold classification of sacred books.<sup>4</sup> He is speaking of the κήρυγμα Πέτρου, and says, "ἐξετάζοντες περὶ τοῦ βιβλίου πότερόν ποτε γνήσιόν ἐστιν ἢ νόθον ἢ μικτόν." The specialties of the book under his consideration made the inquiry as to its being genuine or spurious, or part of both, only natural. It does not appear that Origen proceeded upon such a classification in other cases. Elsewhere<sup>5</sup> he states without qualification that the Prædicatio Petri is an ecclesiastical book, not written by Peter or by any one else divinely inspired.

Origen, as a public speaker and teacher, was well versed in current literature, and both recognised and praised Christian books which are not included in the canon. But he wrote no commentary on any book not in our present canon. He mentions the Gospel of the Hebrews, but with a half apology for using its narrative; the Gospels of Peter and of James he mentions as containing a tradition; and he cites a phrase from the Acts of Paul. He calls "Barnabas" a Catholic Epistle; and in one passage (Latin) has it with "sicut in multis Scripturis invenimus." He mentions with favour the Epistle of Clement. His opinion of Hermas is "quæ Scriptura valde mihi utilis videtur et ut puto divinitus inspirata;" but he elsewhere says that, though widely circulated, it is not accepted by all. Origen did not confine inspiration to canonical books: his generous spirit recognised all truth as from God, without therefore admitting that its expression is authoritative.

XV.—THE PASCHAL CONTROVERSY.

THERE are few controversies which have made so great a noise as that which is called the Paschal Controversy. It was a subject of considerable interest in the second century and thereafter; but it became one of engrossing importance in the second and third quarters of the nineteenth century. The peculiarity of the revived interest is, that it did not content itself with the same range as that within which the first excitement was confined.

The Asiatic Christians of the second century were at issue with the rest of Christendom as to the proper day for closing the fast which preceded the observance of Easter. That was the subject of the original Paschal Controversy.<sup>1</sup> The Tübingen scholars of the nineteenth century endeavoured to make the controversy affect the genuineness of the Gospel of John. The controversialists of the early Church never once believed or imagined that the genuineness of John's Gospel was at stake during their dispute. Nay, it appears in the records of the controversy that the Gospel was admitted about A.D. 170. And it can be

The attempt of Baur and his followers is to show that in Asia Minor, where John lived and died, his authority was quoted in favour of the commemoration of Christ's last supper<sup>1</sup> with His disciples on the 14th Nisan,—a day when, according to his Gospel, the supper could not take place, because the Gospel represents Him as dying on that day. In other words, say Baur and his followers, the actual oral testimony of John was that Christ died on the day when the Synoptists say He died, the 15th; but the testimony of the Gospel falsely ascribed to him is that Christ died the day before.

It would be easy to dwell on several peculiarities of this controversy even as now stated. It is natural, for example, to remark on the assumption that the traditional story is correct, and that the fourth Gospel is the pretender; whereas one might easily hold by the other view, that the local controversialists misinterpreted the Apostle's practice, and that his real opinion must be learned from his book. It is natural also to say that there is grave doubt whether discrepancy really exists between John and the Synoptists, and that, in point of fact, there is no such discrepancy;<sup>2</sup> so that no argument from its existence can be brought against the genuineness of the fourth Gospel. We might almost protest against the assumption that the 14th was originally kept in Asia Minor as the day of Christ's partaking of the Passover, for it was really kept as the day of the Jewish Passover. Nor is it easy to refrain from remarking that so grave questions as the truthfulness and authorship of the fourth Gospel are not fairly solved by mere inferences from fragmentary notices of an obscure controversy.

But we need not tarry on the threshold. It will appear, when we have concluded the inquiry on which we are about to enter, that the controversy did not refer to the day of the Saviour's death, but to the proper day of closing a fast.<sup>3</sup> It will appear that whether or not the aged Apostle sanctioned a particular observance on a particular day, as was alleged in Ephesus half a century after his death, the fact of such

<sup>3</sup> It may be well to translate here what Eusebius says about the controversy (he is speaking of the days of Victor in the end of the second century, say A.D. 190): “There was considerable discussion in the days of these men, because the Churches (παροικίαι) of all Asia, supposing that (ὡς ἂν) they followed a tradition of older date, thought it necessary, on the occasion of the feast of the Christian Passover [passover of salvation], to observe specially the 14th of the month (the day on which the Jews were enjoined to slay the lamb), and believed that it was altogether necessary on that day, whatever day of the week it might happen to be, to terminate the fasts; whereas it was not the custom for the Churches in all the rest of the world to follow this mode, because they observed the custom which, handed down from the days of the Apostles, prevails till now—viz., that it is not fitting to terminate the fasts on any other day than that of the Saviour's resurrection” (H. E. V. 23,—see text, p. 189).

sanction does not touch the question as to the day when Jesus Christ was crucified, still less the question as to the authorship of the Gospel which bears John's name.

It is very difficult to present the Paschal Controversy in its right proportions. It is a complicated subject, and it involves a considerable amount of detail.

The discussion which follows will be under the following heads, and references to the extracts in our text will enable the student to confirm or challenge our own statements:—

- 1°. The Authorities from whom we learn the Nature and Progress of the Controversy.
- 2°. The Controversy and the Combatants at successive stages.
- 3°. Conclusions.

1. The Authorities from whom we learn the Nature and Progress of the Paschal Controversy in the Early Church. (See text, pp. 189-195.)

First, and chief of all, comes Eusebius, who (H. E. V. 23,—see text, p. 189) tells us of a dispute between Victor, the hot-headed bishop of Rome (A.D. 190), and the Church of Asia Minor, regarding the observance of the 14th Nisan. Victor wanted the Asiatics to adopt the Western custom of keeping Good Friday and Easter (ruling their observance by the day of the week), and when they would not adopt it, he excommunicated them! Among those who opposed Victor's arrogant proceedings was Irenæus of Lyons, by birth and training an Asiatic Christian, though now a Western bishop. He approved of the Western form of observance, but not of Victor's attempt to coerce the Asiatics into it.

In the course of his letter to Victor, Irenæus (see p. 191) refers to a period (some five-and-thirty years before) when his old master Polycarp visited Rome, in the time of Anicetus. It appears that Polycarp and Anicetus had discussed the subject of the observance at Easter, the Roman insisting on the day of the week, the Asiatic on the day of the month; but although one could not persuade the other, they parted as friends. In their eyes, and in the eyes of Irenæus, the dispute was not of any vital moment.

Eusebius (H. E. IV. 26) refers to a work of Melito on the Passover, which fixes its own date by speaking of a dispute in Laodicea regarding the Passover during the proconsulate of Servilius Paulus—i.e., about A.D. 175.

To Eusebius, therefore, we are indebted for information regarding three periods of time—Polycarp's time, about A.D. 160;<sup>1</sup> Melito's time,

A.D. 175; Victor's time, A.D. 190. These are separated by intervals of about fifteen years.

Hippolytus (p. 192) is another authority. Writing about A.D. 220, he speaks of certain contemporaries who wished to observe the 14th Nisan. He charges them with wilful subservience to the obsolete ritual of Judaism, and with forgetfulness of the fact that the Jews slew (ἀναπέειν) the true Passover.

Epiphanius (p. 195), about A.D. 368, treats of the "Quarto-decimans" he (or observers of the 14th Nisan—i.e., the representatives of the old Asiatic custom) as heretics. His argument is the usual argument of the Western Church, that Christ, being the True Passover, must have been slain on the day when the Jews killed the paschal lamb.

Last of all, we have "The Paschal Chronicle" (see p. 193, note 5), which professes to give extracts from early writers. The Tübingen scholars, though sceptical about things most surely received in the Christian Scriptures, grasp at those extracts with an eager credulity which is nothing less than amazing. A glance at the alleged extracts shows that they indulge in a style of exegesis much more mystical than we should have been prepared by what we read in Eusebius and elsewhere to find characterising their reputed authors. Furthermore, the passage ascribed to Hippolytus is not found in his works which are in our hands. No such book as that ascribed to Apollinarius is found in the lists of his writings given by Eusebius, Jerome, and Photius. Although these facts dispose us to give little heed to the Chronicle, we shall endeavour to consider its statements in some detail.

2. The Controversy and the Combatants at successive stages.

As we have said already, and shall have frequent occasion to observe in the sequel, the controversy was about the proper day of closing a fast. The Christians of every land, Asia Minor alone excepted, kept the Lord's Day in Easter week as the day of the Resurrection, and closed on that day a fast which they had been observing (see p. 190). But the Christians of Asia had a sacred feast on the 14th Nisan (on whatever day of the week it might fall), and closed their fast on that day—the day when Jews slew their passover (see p. 189). Christendom, in short, (Palestine included), terminated the fast on a particular day of the week; Asia Minor terminated the fast on a particular day of the month.

But darkness comes when we go further, and ask what was the exact observance of the 14th in Asia. What was meant by παραφύλαττον or by τηρεῖν—the words (pp. 189, 191) used for observing the day? They denoted the end of a fast. But in what way it was connected with Christ is uncertain.

The assumption of Baur, that the observance of the day implied the belief on the part of the original observers that Christ had taken the Passover on the 14th, contradicts the historical basis of the observance itself. Its origin was Jewish, not Christian; but it became Christian. It was in later times "The Feast of the Passover of Salvation," not because of the mere date (as Baur's argument requires), but because of the deep truth it commemorated.

The following seems to be the way in which the diverging customs originated. The Jewish Christians, including even Paul himself (Acts xix., xx.) continued when they were at Jerusalem to observe the Jewish feasts more or less regularly, as long as the Temple stood (see 1 Cor. viii., x.; Rom. xiv.). It must have been somewhat different when they were not at Jerusalem; but the Jews who did not make a pilgrimage to the Holy City observed the Passover in so far as to eat unleavened bread, and to rest from work on both the Sabboth days of the feast ("days of holy convocation"), and very possibly took some social meal at the hour of the Paschal Supper in Jerusalem. Thus Paul is said to sail away from Philippi towards Troas "after the days of unleavened bread," Acts xx. 6. There seems to be an allusion to this custom also in 1 Cor. v. 6. This—written to the Corinthian Church—shows at least how familiar the readers of the Epistle were with the custom of observing days of unleavened bread.

The custom of having a special observance of the 14th Nisan of course prevailed most and longest where Jews were more numerous than Gentiles in the Church. The Ephesian Church was at first mainly Jewish, as our notices of Aquila and Priscilla, and of the work done in the synagogue, and of the disciples of the Baptist, &c., may serve to show (Acts xviii. 19, &c.; xix. 1, &c.; Rev. ii. 1, &c.); and St John no doubt found it so on his arrival. That he would take part in the observance of the day of the Passover is most likely. Hence the yearly observance of the 14th Nisan in Ephesus, as elsewhere,—an observance, Jewish in its origin and Jewish in its associations, which lingered on long after the Temple had been overthrown, and the Jews were left without any national meeting-place or festivals. Christian associations gathered round it as years passed on.

In some other Churches it died out altogether, and there grew up instead a yearly celebration of Christ's resurrection on Easter Sunday, and in consequence a commemoration of His death on the Friday before. Hence some difference of custom, which at first was regarded as of no great importance. But practically it came to this, that the Churches of Asia, which had been confirmed in their observance by having had John surviving to sanction it among them (long after the other Apostles had passed away from the midst of other Churches), kept, and the rest of the Christian world did not keep, the 14th Nisan. They kept it, not because of Jewish Law, nor because of Christian Law, but because of an old abiding custom.<sup>1</sup> The idea of the Jewish Passover had fallen into the background, and the thought of Christ as the True and Divine Passover had become prominent. Hence it became "the Feast of the Passover of Salvation."

What, then, of the fasting which seems to have been really the practical occasion of the controversy? In answering this question as regards the Western Church, we need have no difficulty. When the year brought round the time which had been of old that of the Passover, the Western Christians fasted on the day of the week when Jesus Christ died, and the day He was in the grave,<sup>2</sup> but closed their fasts on the Lord's Day—the day of the Resurrection. There is more difficulty as to the Oriental or Asiatic Church. In it, however, we must remember that the Jewish element predominated. The Asiatics had always on the evening of the 14th kept a feast (ἐορτή), a glad feast, and yet a solemn, as all the Passovers of old were; and although they had come to associate it with Christian ideas, it was most of all with the idea that Christ is the better Passover, the True Deliverer from awful death, so that their feast was still a glad one. If they had been fasting before, they would close their fast before this, their feast, began. Hence apparently the discrepancy in the practice of the two branches of the Church.

At all events, it is on the simple point of an existing discrepancy that Polycarp and Anicetus were disputing when Irenæus gives us a glimpse of the earliest-known phase of the controversy. Irenæus, in writing to Victor (see page 191), tells us that when Anicetus of Rome desired Polycarp of Smyrna to give up the custom of keeping the feast (i.e., closing the fast) on the 14th Nisan, Polycarp refused, and defended his practice by pleading that John and the other Apostles with whom he had been conversant always kept that day. Anicetus, on the other hand, held fast by his own Western custom, on the ground that it had been observed by the Presbyters who were before him. No interruption of the peace of the Church was caused by this difference of custom: the two bishops joined in worship and communion, and observers (τηροῦντες) and non-observers (μὴ τηροῦντες) parted in perfect peace and amity.

So far as we can see, the whole dispute was about the Asiatic custom of observing the 14th Nisan as a festal-day, and of therefore closing the fast on that day. There is no trace of a mention of John's Gospel. There is no trace of the controversy being affected by any decision as to the day on which our Lord suffered. Had the dispute at all turned on the observance of a day in commemoration of Christ's death, it is impossible that it could have been carried on without quotations from the Gospels. We have to bear in mind, too, that the story is told by Irenæus, whose full faith in the four Gospels—our four, and those only—is as well known as anything can be. He relates the dispute with no trace of an idea that the authenticity of the fourth Gospel is concerned. And he tells of Polycarp, the disciple of John himself, who had sat at the aged Apostle's feet, and had heard him often speak of the old days when the "Word made flesh dwelt among men."

This is made still clearer when we see the earlier part of Irenæus's letter, in which he explicitly says that the whole dispute was about a fast—when it began, and how long it lasted—and implies by his silence that the date of our Lord's suffering was not involved at all. "For the dispute is not only about the day, but also about the character of the fast. For some think that they ought to fast one day, others two, and others more; some measure their day as containing forty hours night and day. And this diversity among them that observe it is not a thing of our own time only, but at a much earlier time prevailed among those before us, who, perhaps not having ruled very strictly, established for the future a custom which arose in simplicity and isolation (peculiarity, ἰδιωτισμὸν). But, nevertheless, all those men were at peace, and we are at peace with one another, and the difference in fasting establishes the unity of our faith" (p. 191).

The next notice of the subject in Eusebius (H. E. IV. 26—see p. 192) refers to a discussion which took place in Laodicea. He says that Melito, Bishop of Sardis, wrote a book on the Passover beginning thus:—

"In the time of Servilius Paulus, Proconsul of Asia, at which time Sagaris bore his testimony, there took place much discussion in Laodicea about the Passover, which fell at the exact time in those days."

The meaning is, that in the time of Sagaris, on one occasion the day of the week and the day of the month of Christ's crucifixion corresponded, so that the Asiatics and the Western Church were observing the same day. The coincidence was so different from the usual state of the case, in which one part of Christendom was fasting in sorrow, while the other was joyfully celebrating the Resurrection, that men were led to pay special attention to the reckoning on which they had proceeded before. Melito accordingly wrote his book. Eusebius goes on to tell us that "Clement of Alexandria mentions this book in his own work on the Passover, which he says he wrote on occasion of Melito's work."

This is all which is said on the subject by Eusebius, and it indicates discussion without intimating that it led to a quarrel, or even was unfriendly.

We now come to the Third period, to which Eusebius is our guide—A.D. 190. It is here we learn that the Churches of Asia agreed that it was necessary to close the fast on the 14th day of the month (τὰς τῶν Ἀσιτικῶν ἐπιλύσεις ποιῆσθαι), whatever day of the week it might fall; whereas all the other Churches of the Christian world preserved the custom which had come down from apostolical tradition, to close the fast on no other day than that of the Saviour's resurrection—viz., Sunday. So the bishops of other Churches drew up a decree, saying that the mystery of the Lord's resurrection should be celebrated (ἐπιτελοῖτο) on no other day than the Lord's Day, "and that on that day only we observe the termination of the Paschal fasts" (p. 190).

But Polycrates (of Ephesus) led the bishops of Asia, who stoutly asserted (δυσχυρίζομένων) that they should at all hazards maintain their own traditional custom. In his letter to Victor and the Roman Church, he cites the great names of apostolic men who had fallen asleep in Asia, and who had sanctioned the Asiatic observance. "All these," he says, "kept the day of the 14th of the Passover according to the Gospel, making no deviation, but walking according to the rule of the faith." He speaks of John as "he who leaned upon the Lord's breast."

Victor thereupon published an excommunication of all those men as heterodox. But the other bishops refused to agree with him, and exhorted him, on the contrary, to contemplate a course that was calculated to promote peace, unity, and mutual love. Irenæus seems to have been the chief of Victor's opponents on this point, and in name (ἐκ προσώπου) of the brethren over whom he presided in Gaul, he wrote a weighty letter. Asiatic though he was by birth, he agreed with the Western Church in regard to observance; but treating this as a small matter, he reminds Victor that he was aiming at the impossible in seeking uniformity in such things. He tells the story of Polycarp and Anicetus, as already abridged on p. xc.

If now we look back on the whole narrative of Eusebius, we find that from first to last the whole dispute is caused by a want of uniformity in the date of closing a fast which seems to have usually preceded the time of the Passover,—the Asiatics following the Jews in going by the 14th day of the moon. Those Asiatics traditionally observed a feast-day on the 14th, but, as we have said, instead of a Jewish, it had become, by the natural course of events, a purely Christian one. So far as we can see, the fourth Gospel is in no way concerned. "The Gospel" (τὸ εὐαγγέλιον) seems to be supposed to be one harmonious narrative (p. 191). John's own countenance to the observance is indeed pleaded—and probably rightly pleaded—but in his day the feast was still a Jewish one. And even in the later times, when the "feast of the Christian Passover" was the name for it, the original idea still coloured the whole view taken of it.

But whatever it was about, the controversy was not about the fourth Gospel, and did not involve the authenticity of that Gospel. The men who conducted it were well aware of the existence of that Gospel, and it was impossible to have kept its authenticity out of dispute, if it had been really concerned. Dr Davidson says that the Christians of Asia Minor knew the fourth Gospel, but did not acknowledge it as John's. But we can only admit this when we forget that during the very prevalence of the controversy Irenæus was writing upon the Gospels, and that this Gospel was quoted by other writers at a still earlier date.

Upon what, then, if not on the narrative of Eusebius, do the opponents of the Gospel rely? Upon the anonymous Paschal Chronicle, and especially on the words quoted from Apollinaris or Apollinarius, who was Bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia about A.D. 170-180. Eusebius does not seem to have heard of his work on the Passover (see Eus. H. E. IV. 27). His testimony, however, is quoted in course of a long dissertation by the writer of the preface to the Chronicle, the object of which (see p. 193 and note) is to show that Christ, as being the true Paschal Lamb, must have fulfilled the type of the former Paschal lambs by dying on the 14th. The whole argument is one of typology.

The writer, however, adduces testimonies in favour of the position he thus maintains. The first extract (p. 193) is said to be from Hippolytus, "Book against all Heresies." The passage is not found in Hippolytus's work which has come down to us.<sup>1</sup> But, assuming that it is true, what does it say? It is in the same line as the extracts from Apollinarius which follow. It is to the effect that Christ did not eat the Passover before suffering, but Himself suffered as the true Passover.

The second alleged extract from Hippolytus is to the same effect. Christ did not eat the Passover, but died.

It is needless to say that these passages distinctly contradict, not John, but the Synoptists.

The next authority cited is Apollinarius :—

1. We see that Apollinarius considers the whole controversy—as Polycarp and Anicetus did before, and as Irenæus did at a later date—a very subordinate one. It is a case of ignorance, pardonable ignorance—a mistake. This could not have been his language had the grave question of the canonicity of John's Gospel been involved.

2. As regards ἀσύμφωνος τῷ νόμῳ,—this means that the idea of the Quarto-decimans contradicts the law in so far as the Passover (and therefore Christ as the Passover) must be offered on the 14th. He says that the 14th was the day of the true Passover,—not because Christ had eaten on it the typical Passover with the Jews, but because He Himself, as the true Passover, had offered Himself to God. It appears from this, that in Apollinarius's day men were defending their keeping of the feast on that day by saying that Christ Himself kept one.

3. The words στασιάζειν κατ' αὐτοὺς τὰ εὐαγγέλια may be translated in two ways, either of which comes to the same conclusion—viz., that there was some discrepancy between John and the Synoptists. This may be (1) said to be the opinion of the Asiatics, or (2) it may (more probably) be a hesitating conclusion drawn by Apollinarius himself. But in either case it implies that John and the Synoptists were accepted by all concerned as kindred and equally valuable histories. For it is not Mark or Luke that is at conflict with Matthew; if any one, it is John. It is most natural to believe that Apollinarius (or rather, the author of the extract) is making an inference from the fact that those Quarto-decimans quoted Matthew, and that he in a hesitating way suggests that John seems to favour the other view. It is to be observed that neither Apollinarius nor any one else attempts to meet the clear statement of the Synoptists, that Christ did partake of the Passover before He suffered; and, with the exception of this very vague allusion, they do not seem to think that John was at issue with the other evangelists. Apollinarius's whole case was rested on the typological idea that Jesus, being the true Passover, must have died on the 14th.

This, then, far from being against John's Gospel, is really in its favour. So is the next extract from Apollinarius, in which, with elaborate eloquence, he declares that "the 14th is the true Passover of the Lord, the great sacrifice, who, being God's Son (παῖς), was instead of the Lamb, who was bound, and bound the strong man, who was judged and is Judge of quick and dead, and who was delivered into the hands of sinners that He might be crucified; who was exalted on the horns of the unicorn, and who was wounded in His holy side; who poured out from that side the two things that cleanse again (?), blood and water, Logos and Spirit; and who was buried on the day of the Passover, a stone being laid on His tomb."

Here we observe that not only is the writer's own view that the 14th is the day of Christ's burial, and therefore may be said to agree with what is often supposed to be the view taken in John's Gospel, but he clearly quotes John in speaking of the water and the blood which flowed from the wounded side. This, therefore, makes nothing against, but much for, the general reception of that Gospel which the Tübingen scholars allege to have been forged twenty years before.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "Apollinarius's" own views regarding the observance of the 14th are not made very clear. But whatever they were, it is amazing that Hilgenfeld should build upon them such a superstructure as that Melito and Apollinarius were foes—Melito the champion of the Quarto-decimans, and Apollinarius of a deutero-Johannine party,

The extract from Clement leads us to remark that the Western Church had the worst of the argument from Scripture, when the other side could point to the clear statements of Matthew (representing the Synoptists). They endeavoured to show that the supper which our Lord ate with His disciples was not the real Paschal Supper, but a preparatory meal at which He instructed them in the true meaning of the Passover. Clement, of course, believed in the Johannine authorship of the fourth Gospel, and quotes John in speaking of the washing of the feet.

Conclusion.

We have seen that the subject was the observance of the 14th day of Nisan as a day of a feast necessitating the closing of the fast. It is obscure enough, and the Asiatic Christians went on in their course, although the other parts of Christendom opposed their practice of having a feast at the close of their fast, on the day of the Jewish Passover. We have seen that John's Gospel is never supposed to be at stake by any of the disputants. We have seen some of the disputants quote it. We have seen Polycrates describe John as one who leaned on the Lord's breast, and in the same breath say that the Asiatic custom was according to the concurrent teaching of the Gospels (κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον). We have "Apollinarius" referring to the blood and water which came from the wounded side of Jesus; we know that Irenæus took part in the controversy, and told an anecdote of his old master Polycarp, without seeming to know that the truth of that Gospel which must have been specially dear to Polycarp was at issue.

And we are asked to believe that the fourth Gospel was, meanwhile, struggling into position as a standard in the Church; that in some places it was accepted, and in others unknown; that it was known in Asia Minor, but not believed to be John's; and yet that never from first to last did any one refer to it! If the followers of Baur could hold that John's Gospel was not yet written, that until the end of the second century there was no such book,—they would be at least consistent. But this is what they cannot say. Even Baur himself admitted that John's Gospel was written in A.D. 160, and his followers have been driven back step by step, until by some a date in the very beginning of the century is admitted.<sup>1</sup> The whole elaborate argument, therefore, that John's Gospel could not have existed, is upset by the simple proof that it did exist. And the idea that, although the Gospel was known by those Asiatics, it was repudiated by them as not placing a second Johannine tradition in opposition to the first. He also would have it that Hippolytus is replying to Melito, so that λέγει γὰρ οὗτος (p. 194, line 1) is, "Melito says," &c.

being John's, and yet that there never in the heat of controversy was one word dropped to show that this was their conviction, asks us to admit more than is reasonable. Whatever that discussion about the Passover was—and it is in some respects obscure enough—it was a pitiful wrangle as compared with the momentous controversy which Baur would fain have us decide by an inference from it.

XVI.—APOCRYPHAL LITERATURE.

THE meaning of the name Apocrypha, as applied to certain books, is a subject of dispute. What is "hidden" may be the origin of the books, or it may be the esoteric doctrines they are supposed to contain. But there is no doubt that the word Apocrypha came to denote what is in a particular way opposed to canonical. The apocryphal books were not, indeed, canonical, but neither were they secular: they competed with the canonical books for the regard of the Christian Church. For the most part they claimed to have an origin and authority fully equal to those of the sacred books which were usually accepted in the Church.<sup>1</sup>

Speaking generally, it may be said that they took their rise in the heresies of the second and fourth centuries. The heretics who sought to establish their views in the midst of the Church, which held by certain books and by their ordinary interpretation, were under the necessity of (1) putting forced interpretations on the true books; or (2) of altering the text of those true books; or (3) of constructing new books for themselves. We find, as a matter of fact, that sometimes one of these courses was adopted, sometimes heretics followed all the three. The chief motive-power was Gnosticism.

Gnosticism—which was in the main an attempt to combine revelation with philosophy—was older than Christianity, and originated in the encounter of the Jews of the dispersion with the philosophies of Greece and of the East. The tendency to manufacture semi-sacred books, and the tendency to forge books under famous names, were in full operation at the beginning of the Christian era. There were at that date books current under the names of Adam, Moses, &c.; and others called after Orpheus, Musæus, Homer, &c. Paul alludes to forged epistles, 2 Thess. ii. 2, iii. 17. It is not impossible that he has forged documents in view in 1 Tim. iv. 7; Titus i. 14,<sup>2</sup> whose authors were Christians that had gone back to Judaism. (Compare Titus i. 20, 22; 2 Tim. iv. 5). Gnosticism was essentially eclectic, and its chief endeavours were directed to the formation of systems with some room in them for everything. Just as it drew from Zoroaster, from the Old Testament, from current philosophy, so also did it draw from pretended Old Testament writings, bearing ancient names (such as those of Adam, Seth, the Twelve Patriarchs); and also from pretended New Testament writings ascribed to the Apostles, or (indirectly) to Christ Himself.

The time when the Christian Apocrypha were written was, as we have said, the period from the second to the fourth century. In the second century men began to appeal to the written Word, because the living voice of those who had heard Jesus, or who had known those that companied with Him, was hushed in death. Especially, when controversy arose, was there an appeal to "that which is written." The increasing authority thus ascribed to the sacred books led the heretics, in simple defence of their own position, to forge rivals and counterparts. Did the orthodox appeal to the words of Paul, or Peter, or John? The heretics had also apostolic words to fall back upon. Here they are! The Gospel of "Philip," or of "Thomas," or of "Bartholomew," or of "Peter." So again in the fourth century, when the common opinion of the Christian Church had gravitated to agreement on the contents of the canon, and the Church had sufficient unity to make public and recognised use of the canon or collection, we find a large and widely-known number of books outside of that canon. They were not all Gospels. Some of them were Acts; some had other names; most of them had received their first shape in the second century, but had been subsequently manipulated by successive editors.

It must not be supposed that all extra-canonical books were regarded as heretical. There was a class of books, known as useful or ecclesiastical, which were not supposed to be authoritative. Some of them were special favourites in particular districts, and were habitually read in the churches, although they were not standards of doctrine. The "Apostolic Fathers" belonged to this class, although there were also others in it. Beneath those books, and quite distinct from them, was the class of heretical books which heretics had invented or altered so as to gain confirmation for their own dogmas. The famous classification of Eusebius (see pp. 10, 11) is based in the main on the general acceptance of particular books by the Christian Church; but it contains also an outspoken declaration, that while some books were disqualified from being regarded as canonical by their being only known to sections of the Church, there were others, the acceptance of which was not only partial but confined to heretics.

The sacred writings of the first class were set on an eminence sacred to themselves. No other writings were ever admitted to that position by the Catholic Church. It is true that individual writers may be quoted as referring to those writings which were on the whole rejected; and it is true that sects of heretics affected to regard particular apocryphal books as the true Scriptures. But it is also true that no consensus of testimony in favour of any apocryphal book can be produced, and that no book, even of the useful or ecclesiastical sort, has any such witness in its favour as to admit of its being even put into comparison with any book now in the canon.<sup>1</sup> One province or one sect might favour this book or that, but Christendom as a whole was not affected by the local predilection.

When we look at the New Testament Apocrypha as a whole in order to analyse or classify the list of some fifty Gospels,<sup>2</sup> we find that it may be reduced considerably.

In many cases the word "Gospel" did not claim to denote a historical work, but what we may call an outline of the doctrine of Christianity. This was St Paul's meaning when he spoke of "my Gospel" (Rom. ii. 16; xvi. 25, &c.) The "Teaching of Peter" may have been such a mixture of fact, argument, and illustration as would be furnished by a condensed report of Peter's addresses. Thus also Valentinus's "Gospel of Truth" appears to have been a doctrine of salvation, and not a life of Jesus (Iren. B. III. 2, 9).<sup>3</sup> So also Manes, the founder of the Manichees, promulgated a "Living Gospel," or "Gospel of Life," or "Living Truth." Such books "made the Gospel of none effect;" but they were not competing historical narratives.

Again, some of the false Gospels were probably only a true Gospel altered to suit the views of a particular man or sect or party. We know that Marcion's Gospel was an altered Luke; Basilides may perhaps have made Matthew (Matthias? see text, p. 389, and Clem., Strom. VII. 17, 108, p. 900) his basis; and Apelles is said to have made similar use of John.<sup>4</sup> Some of the Gospels, themselves originally apocryphal, were certainly reissued with changes according to the ideas of successive editors. The numerous extant Gospels of the Nativity are

<sup>3</sup> The charge which Irenæus brings against Valentinus is that his system was no fair inference from, or representation of, the truth of Christ. The ground idea of his theory was that men are divided into πνευματικοί or φρόνιμοι; ψυχικοί; σαρκικοί. The first class are also γνωστικοί. They, being spiritual men, are wholly saved, obtaining after this life a spiritual body, which indeed they already carry within them. The second class raise themselves—not without difficulty—above the indwelling of the Creator-Æon or inferior God (δημιουργός), and come under angelic guidance so as to reach purity, but it is purity without a body. The third class perish wholly, both soul and body, being unfit for anything better. Those who wish to see how the human mind runs the same round of speculation in successive ages may compare those views of Valentinus with the speculations on the resurrection body in W. R. Greg's 'Enigmas of Life.'

only recensions or editions of the Protevangel or "Gospel of James." There are several of those ancient Gospels of which we know only the names, and it is supposed that many of them are the same book under different names. We know something (see text) of the Gospel of the Nazarenes and of the Gospel of the Ebionites, and we have reason to believe that those, as well as the Gospels of Bartholomew, of Cerinthus, and of the Twelve Apostles, were recensions of the Gospel of the Hebrews. And this was apparently a recension of St Matthew.

There was another and a large class, professing to contain true traditions of Christian doctrine, which had come down by special channels to the authors. Thus the "Gospel of Judas Iscariot" (Iren. B. I. 35) professed to give the true account of the motives of Judas in seeking to terminate the baleful reign of Jehovah by betraying Jesus Christ. The Cainites professed to find their perfect knowledge in a book that Paul composed after being in the third heavens. The "Gospel of Philip" (as stated below) is a collection of ascetic Gnostic traditions, using the authority of Christ to attack marriage, &c.<sup>1</sup>

Again it is probable that several of the so-called Gospels were compilations from the canonical Gospels. Tatian's Diatessaron was an avowed harmony, and it did not stand alone. Ambrosius, a friend of Origen, says: "Plerique etiam ex quatuor Evangelii libris in unum ea, quæ veneratis putaverunt assertionibus convenientia, refererunt."<sup>2</sup> The book which Serapion found in circulation in Rhossus (Eus. II. E. VI. 12), professing to be the Gospel of Peter, seems to have been a harmony of the Gospel narratives, but with Docetic additions. Jerome, followed by the Decree of Gelasius, condemns the codices of Hesychius and Lucian, which seem to have been some kind of harmony, with additions.<sup>3</sup>

We may divide all the Christian apocryphal books or writings into GOSPELS, ACTS, EPISTLES, and APOCALYPSES.<sup>4</sup> Of extant<sup>5</sup> apocryphal

<sup>5</sup> Of apocryphal Gospels still extant, the most complete edition is Tischendorf's, and in it are twenty-two books, some of them duplicates or recensions of the same work. They are—1. The Protevangelium or Gospel of James (Greek); 2. Pseudo-Matthew (Latin); 3. Gospel of the Nativity of Mary (Latin); 4. History of Joseph the Carpenter (Latin, from Arabic); 5-7. Gospel of Thomas (three recensions—two Greek, one Latin); 8. Gospel of the Infancy (Latin, from Arabic); 9-11. Acts of Pilate (three recensions—two Greek, one Latin); 12-14. Descent of Christ to the Dead (three recensions—one Greek and two Latin); 15, 16. An Epistle of Pilate to GOSPELS, the most important, as claiming, in whole or part, to date from the second century, are the Protevangelium or Gospel of James, the Gospel of Thomas, the Acts of Pilate (sometimes published as the first part of the Gospel of Nicodemus). These, then, refer respectively to the parentage, the childhood, and the death of Jesus Christ, and each of them had many imitators.<sup>1</sup>

The Protevangel, probably dating from the middle of the second century, and brought to Europe from the Levant by Postel in the sixteenth century, professes to give a narrative of earlier events than are found in the canonical Gospels. There are in it various incidents and statements to which reference is made by early Fathers: as, for example, the birth in the cave (Justin Martyr, Dial. 78<sup>2</sup>); the perpetual virginity of Mary (as Clem. Alex. refers to it<sup>3</sup>); the brethren of the Lord being Joseph's children by a former marriage (Origen, see pp. 464, 467<sup>4</sup>). From the time of Epiphanius there can be little doubt that the book existed in a form very like what it at present bears. His references to Joachim, Mary's father; to the assigning of Mary by lot to Joseph, &c., make this out. The Hebraisms of style, and the many proofs of familiarity with Jewish custom and tradition, point to a Jewish or Ebionite author, probably an Ebionite Gnostic. There are anachronisms<sup>5</sup> which make this conclusion less than absolutely certain; but still it is probable. The name of James was popular among Jewish Christians, and some of them (Eus. H. E. III. 27) believed in the supernatural birth of Jesus from a virgin, as this book teaches. The Gnostic difficulty of believing Jesus to be sinless when He had a material body was removed a step backwards when the virgin mother was said to be a child of supernatural origin, and sinless. The purpose of the author was to buttress the marvellous facts of Christ's life by investing the birth of His mother with a kindred miraculous sanctity; and the book has been the parent of innumerable ecclesiastical traditions which, following an eastward course, have furnished the Koran with many legends relative to our Lord's birth and parentage; and in their west-the Emperor (Claudius), and one to Tiberius (found in the Descent of Christ to the Dead); 17, 18. Anaphora Pilati; 19. Paradosis Pilati; 20. Death of Pilate; 21. Narrative of Joseph of Arimathea; 22. Vindicta Salvatoris.

<sup>1</sup> Thus the pseudo-Matthew and the Nativity of Mary seek to establish the descent of Mary from the tribe of Judah, and the sanctity of Joseph the carpenter. The clumsy forgery, No. 4 (in the list in the previous note), carries the greatness of Joseph much further, though not so far as the modern Church of Rome.

<sup>3</sup> Clement (Strom. VII. 16, p. 890) separates himself from those who own the authority of the story by saying “φασὶ τινες.” Jerome expressly disclaims all faith in there being midwives at Mary's delivery, and so sweeps away the story.

<sup>4</sup> Origen (Comment. in Mat., vol. iii. p. 463) sets the Gospels ascribed to Peter and to James on the same level.

ern development have culminated in our own day in the authoritative promulgation, by Pope Pius IX., of the dogma of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary.<sup>1</sup>

The Gospel of Thomas, containing a narrative of the life of Jesus from His fifth to His twelfth year, found in many forms—Greek, Latin, and Syriac, with very numerous variations—may perhaps date from the second century, and, at all events, contains curious incidents, to which reference is made by Irenæus<sup>2</sup> and others. Origen<sup>3</sup> and Eusebius speak of a Gospel of Thomas to condemn it, as also does the Decree of Gelasius. In this Gospel are found the well-known stories of miracles wrought by the child Jesus, such as making sparrows of clay, carrying water home in his garment, killing and reviving a harsh teacher, &c. They are childish freaks of omnipotence.

What is popularly called the Gospel of Nicodemus comes next; but under this title (which seems to date from the time of Charlemagne) two distinct works are combined:—

(1.) "The Acts of Pilate" is a brief title of what professes to be a memorial of what our Lord Jesus Christ did under Pontius Pilate, and is an expansion of the canonical narrative, especially of John's Gospel. The impotent man (John v. 5), and the blind man (John ix. 1), and a cripple and a leper, appear before Pilate to testify to Christ,<sup>4</sup> &c. (2.) The "Descent of Christ to the Under World" professes to be an account by Simeon and his two sons of what took place when Christ, as King of Glory, burst open the gates of Hades, and bound Satan, and removed the saints of old time to a higher state of being. It is a noble poem, with a simple majesty surpassing all that Milton has sung, and free from the grotesqueness which detracts from the grandeur of Dante. But this—the second part of the "Gospel of Nicodemus"—is not so old as the first. The other books referring to Pilate in the apocryphal list are of little moment.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The reference in Hippolytus to the Gospel of Thomas, "Ἐμὲ δὲ ζητῶν εὐρήσκει ἐν παιδίοις ἀπὸ ἐτῶν ἐπτά," gives a passage not in the book as we now have it.

<sup>4</sup> The name of Pilate's wife (Procla) is given; the woman with the issue of blood is called Veronica; the soldier who pierced Jesus' side is Longinus. Other traditions give this name to the centurion at the cross. The penitent thief, Dysmas, and his unbelieving comrade, Gestas, are also named.

<sup>5</sup> On the Acts of Pilate see pp. 174 (and note), 464, 465. Tischendorf's elaborate argument in favour of his position that this is the book Justin knew, fails to make out its existence in the third century. Eusebius does not say he had seen it.

We may further roughly group the lost apocryphal Gospels as—

II. Gospels named after those who used them.—The Gospels of the Hebrews, Nazarenes, Ebionites, Egyptians, come first under this head.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gospel of Philip.—It is uncertain whether the Evangelist or Apostle was the professed author. The book was a collection of ascetic Gnostic traditions inculcating self-denial. Jesus is said to have taught Philip what the soul ought to say in ascending to heaven, and how to answer each one of the powers above. If any man had begotten children, he must wait below till he could take his children with him. See Epiph. Hær. 26, 13.

<sup>2</sup> Bartholomew.—Condemned by Gelasius. In his Pref. to Comment. on Mat. Jerome speaks of it, and condemns it as untrue. There is a story that Pantænus found Bartholomew in India, preaching the advent of the Lord Jesus according to Matthew's Gospel, and that Pantænus brought the Gospel of Matthew, written in Hebrew, back with him to Alexandria. (See text, p. 133.) It is possible that Bartholomew had written out Matthew's Gospel, and that his copy, with preface and alterations, after passing through various hands, was called the Gospel of Bartholomew by those who did not know its true history.

<sup>4</sup> The Gospel of Peter, see p. 466.—Eusebius groups it with the Gospels of Thomas and Matthias as unworthy of regard. Some identify it with the Gospel of Basilides.

<sup>5</sup> Gospel of Thomas.—Besides the Gospel of the Infancy (to which reference is made), there was another Gospel of Thomas written by one of the twelve scholars of Manes (see p. 24). It was used by Gnostics and Manichees, and condemned by several Fathers. Some think—but not very probably—that the two books were the same.

<sup>6</sup> Gospel of Judas Thaddæus.—Condemned by Gelasius. It has been conjectured that the name is a mistake for Matthias.

<sup>7</sup> Gospel of Judas Iscariot.—As noticed on pp. 385, 386, note 1, this Gospel was full of hatred of the Jews and the Mosaic doctrines, and was in use among the Cainites. One of the primary principles of the sect was, that before a man could be saved he must make trial of every kind of vice.

<sup>8</sup> Gospel of Matthias.—No undoubted fragment of this often-mentioned Gospel remains. Several Gnostics founded upon writings ascribed to Matthias. Clem. Alex. (Strom. VII. 17, p. 900) names the followers of Valentinus, Marcion, and Basilides as doing so,—see also Hipp. Hær. VII. 20. The quotation of Clem. Alex. from the Traditions of Matthias on the duties of an elect person (text, p. 452) is probably from another book than the Gospel, if indeed it be from a book at all. Some suppose that a book of Matthias is one of those to which St Luke refers in the Preface to his Gospel. See Mill, Proleg. in N. T., § 53.

<sup>9</sup> Gospel of Barnabas.—Condemned by Gelasius. No trace of this Gospel remains. Some say Barnabas translated Matthew's original Hebrew into Greek. We are told, also, that his body was found with the Gospel of Matthew lying on his heart, written in his own hand. There is a curious Mohammedan imposture professing to be the Gospel of Barnabas. It tells of Jesus appearing to His mother and disciples to say that it was not He but Judas who had died on the cross, and that the name of Jesus would bear the reproach of a death of crucifixion until Mohammed appeared to deliver all believers from error.

<sup>10</sup> Gospel of the Twelve Apostles.—This is supposed to be a name for the Gospel of the Hebrews in one of its many forms, and probably was the name used among the Jews of Palestine. See Kleuker, § 952.

III. Harmonies.—Tatian's Gospel, and those of Peter, Hesychius, and Lucian, have been already mentioned. They seem to have come under this head.

IV. Miscellaneous.—Gospel of Eve,<sup>8</sup> of Perfection,<sup>9</sup> of Seth,<sup>10</sup> [of Truth].<sup>11</sup>

The foregoing is a general list and classification of the apocryphal Gospels. The value of those books to the student of canonicity does not lie in their quotations from our canonical books, because all such quotations are subject to suspicion, owing to our uncertainty of the date of the apocryphal Gospels, and our certainty that they were much altered after their first composition. Some quotations are given in our text, and some have been indicated in the foregoing paragraphs. The apocryphal books are valuable because—

1. They imply the existence of the canonical books. They are in their very nature supplementary. They attempt to speak of what the New Testament does not tell: of the previous history of Mary, of the childhood of Jesus, of His life while His body was in Joseph's tomb, <sup>1</sup> The Gospel of the Enekratites ("the continent") is conjectured to have been Tatian's Diatessaron, because Tatian himself was an Enekratite. But it may have been the Gospel of the Egyptians, which certainly favoured Enekratite views.

<sup>2</sup> The Manichees used three books—Zōn Eὐαγγέλιον, Gospel of Thomas, and Gospel of Philip. The first was a Doctrine or Gospel of Life—the true Christian teaching, according to Manes.

<sup>3</sup> See p. 413 and note. The name of this book was the Gospel of Truth. It was a book of Jewish Theosophy, not intended as a substitute for our Gospels, but as a doctrinal treatise. See p. 70.

<sup>7</sup> Seythianus was a predecessor of Manes. This book was a Manichæan Gospel, and was used by the Simonians (Photius). It was probably a statement of Manichæan doctrine, and contained a pretended narrative of our Lord's life. Seythianus wrote a "Book of the Four Quarters of the World," and its divisions were—1. The Gospel; 2. The Quintessence (κεφαλαία); 3. The Mysteries (the Old Testament); 4. The Treasures (the New Testament). See Kleuker, § 985.

<sup>8</sup> Eve.—Used by the Ophites, and pretending to be what the serpent taught the woman. See p. 386, note. (Epiph. Hær. 26.)

<sup>9</sup> Perfection.—Used by Gnostics. Some regard it as the same with the Gospel of Philip, or that of Basilides, or that of Eve. (See Epiph. Hær. 26.)

<sup>10</sup> Seth.—Used by some Syrian Gnostics: see p. 386, note. Seth was reported to have had divine beauty, and to have invented the Hebrew alphabet, and discovered the celestial signs. He is alleged to have planted a bough of the tree of life of which Moses got a branch in his miraculous rod.

and of other and similar subjects of curiosity. But they would be unintelligible if they stood alone. Considered in themselves, they are incapable of constituting the Scriptures of a religion. The Jesus of whom they tell is one well known and adored on the strength of other narratives which describe the object of His life and teaching. None of the three we have spoken of as the best of their kind could account for its own existence, if the Gospel of Jesus Christ as we have it in the canon were not presupposed. The existence of those apocrypha in the second century is a testimony to the older date, and the authority of our Gospels.<sup>1</sup>

They do not so explicitly as Clement of Rome or Polycarp disclaim all competition with the inspired writings, but they imply subordination in their whole texture.

2. The amazing discrepancies in the different MSS of the apocryphal Gospels are proof that men felt themselves at liberty to manipulate those books as they pleased. No sacred awe kept the hands of the copyist and the chronicler from adjusting them to suit his own views. No salvation was perilled on their veracity. Let them say what they might, it could not essentially alter the course of history. It is true that we have traced the Ebionite in one, the Marcosian in another: but while one man twisted the tradition in one direction, another twisted it in the very opposite, and all betray a consciousness that the books are but outworks from which the inner citadel of Christian Revelation may be assailed or protected. When a heretic of real power wished to make a heretical book the very Bible of his sect, he must, like Apelles or Marcion (or Basilides?), take some one of the four Gospels, and—either by dilution or abridgment—torture it to serve his purposes. The Gnostics were the chief parents of apocryphal writings, but the earliest Gnostics invented meanings and explanations of facts, not the facts themselves. Their books were essentially commentaries or essays, or philosophising upon acknowledged Scriptures.

But when some leader of a subdivision of one of the great heresies desired to distinguish himself, or to confirm in men's minds the notions of the school to which he belonged, he could do no better than issue a new or a revised apocryphal Gospel. It took up subjects omitted in the canonical books: it did not therefore come into direct competition with them; and the reader or hearer was not on the alert against such supplementary speculations. Among people predisposed to receive it, the book had therefore ready acceptance. In course of time another man manipulated the book for a slightly different purpose: if of another country, he translated it with such omissions or additions as he chose. Hence it is that we have in the extant apocryphal Gospels various recensions of which we are uncertain whether to speak as recensions or as different books. When we compare those divergencies—say in the Gospel of Thomas and the pseudo-Matthew, or the nativity of Mary—with the small points involved in the “disputed passages” of Scripture, we have an argument of real weight. In the one case the great changes show us that we have compositions which it was no one’s business to protect from the editor’s caprice; and in the other, from the anxiety to maintain the text, we see that we have books which all Christendom accepted so heartily, and guarded so faithfully, that it was not in an editor’s power to make material alterations.

3. We may further and finally say, that wide as has been the influence of the apocryphal Gospels on Christian traditions and Christian art,<sup>1</sup> its nature was from the first such as to make it easy to understand how the names of the books perished from memory. There was usually nothing in the traditional incident to alarm a believer in Scripture, while the very name of the book as a pretender to canonical authority was reprobated. One can easily see how few Christians would care to quote or to acknowledge the books condemned in the Decree of Gelasius, and yet how easily the traditions they contained would be often embodied in sermons and works of art. When the canon was regarded as complete, the older apocryphal books naturally fell into disuse and were forgotten. Thus from the fourth century onwards there was an increasing disregard of the names of the once famous books, and from the sixth century they seem to have been forgotten. The Papal Church has persisted in this disregard of the books, while yielding more and more to the tendencies which they represent. It is the Protestant Church which has exhumed them, and Protestant theologians see most clearly their historical and apologetical value.

The apocryphal Acts are, with one exception, not so old or so important for our purpose. The full list of those given in Tischendorf’s collection is long : (1) Acts of Peter and Paul, (2) of Paul and Thecla, (3) of Barnabas, (4) of Philip, (5) of Philip in Hellas, (6) of Andrew, (7) of Andrew and Matthias, (8) Acts and Martyrdom of Matthew, (9) of Thomas, (10) Consummation of Thomas, (11) Acts of Bartholomew, (12) of Thaddeus, (13) of John. Of these, the Acts of Paul and Thecla (see note, p. 180) is the most important, and probably dates from the second century.<sup>1</sup> Some of its quotations are given in the text, p. 180, &c. It is superfluous to say that it testifies to the Pauline writings. But the narrative in its present form contains many things to which one naturally ascribes a date much later than the second century. There is not only inculcation of celibacy in the strongest terms, but prayers for the dead, a high view of the sacraments, and (in one version) laudation of relics.

This leads us to notice the distinctive feature of the apocryphal "Acts." Each book has a distinct purpose, which usually is to solve some knotty question of Church Discipline or Government. We know how many of the chief questions which emerge in the Church find their solution in St Luke's narrative : and those uncanonical books seek to occupy similar ground with Luke. The position of women in the Church is evidently before the mind of the author of "Paul and Thecla," and he seeks to secure that it shall be a prominent one. Celibacy is greatly glorified in the same book. The "seal," as it is called, of the Sacrament, is much prized. In the Acts of Thomas, baptism with oil is treated as a royal chrism ; and Gnostic mysticism is greatly enhanced in the accompanying incantations or prayers. The Acts of Barnabas teach that "orders" are indelible : the Acts of John that Christ's humanity was a semblance. Some of the books have an ethical purpose : in the Acts of Philip we have a powerful warning against revenge ; in the Acts of Andrew and Matthias the cruelty of the unregenerate human heart is expounded.

But, on the whole, the purpose of each book is to show—not like St Luke's narrative, how the Gospel of Jesus Christ was brought to bear on Jew and Gentile, on the mob, or on the potentate, but—how some special, even minor, point was the burden of an Apostle's teaching and labour. In this the Apocrypha betray their later origin. The central Christian doctrine is taken for granted ; men's minds are full of some detail. Miracles have become portents or trials of strength—are no longer subordinate agencies in the inculcation of spiritual truth. The interest of each narrative also is usually limited and local, not universal. Certainly no one of them ever gained—possibly none ever sought—the regard of the Church of Christ as a whole.

<sup>1</sup> See details in Tischendorf's Prolegomena to his edition of the Acts, p. xxiii ; or in Jones on the Canon, vol. ii. p. 326. Jerome says the baptism of a lion was narrated in this book. This is not in the copy which we have. This has thrown doubt on the antiquity of the work in its present form.

In the second century there was a famous collection of apocryphal Acts by Leucius Charinus (see text, p. 25), who seems to have been a Gnostic, somewhat after the fashion of Marcion. His book, known as αἱ τῶν ἀποστόλων περίοδοι, contained Acts of Peter, John, Andrew, Thomas, and Paul (so Photius). It is doubtful whether the extant "Acts" were ever portions of that book, which seems to have had some internal unity. Zahn (Acta Joannis, p. cxlii) dates "Leucius" in A.D. 130.<sup>1</sup>

There is an apostolical history in ten books ascribed to Abdias, Bishop of Babylon. It is a clumsy forgery, probably not earlier than the sixth century,—certainly not earlier than the fifth.<sup>2</sup>

The apocryphal EPISTLES—such as Laodiceans, the Epistles to the Corinthians and the Philippians (see p. 209, note), the letter of Jesus to Abgar (Eus. H. E. I. 13), and the letters ascribed to Pilate (noticed above)—are also to be passed with simple mention. The letters of Paul to Seneca are an interesting forgery (see p. 209). The student of Church History may be interested in Eusebius's strong statements regarding the correspondence of Jesus with Abgar.

The apocryphal APOCALYPSES of the New Testament do not fill so important a place in the history of criticism, or in doctrinal controversy, as do some of the Apocalypses of the Old Testament.<sup>3</sup> The Apocalypse of Paul professes to utter what Paul had seen: the Apocalypse of John reads like a travesty of the canonical book, the chief point of interest being recognition of each other in the future state of the good: "Mary's falling asleep" has in it, in several versions, substantially the same story of all the Apostles being brought from their various scenes of labour, even the dead from their graves. Passing by the others, we may mention the Assumption of Moses,<sup>4</sup> which professes to be a charge by Moses to Joshua, and ends abruptly. Some critics believe that if we had it all, we should have the passage which Jude quoted; and an incident to which Clem. Alex. refers (Strom. VII. 15), when he represents Joshua as seeing Moses double,—one part ascending with the angels, one buried in the earth. Nay, they find that Moses was the original of the phoenix,—his mortal part falling to the earth, his immortal part rising to the skies. All this is pure hypothesis, though it has attracted the clear mind of Hilgenfeld.<sup>5</sup>

XVII.—THE FOURTH GOSPEL.

It is perhaps superfluous to make any comments upon the testimonies to the fourth Gospel in the text of this work; but as that Catena contains nearly all the citations on which stress has ever been laid in the controversy of about half a century, it may be useful to the student to have a few notes on what are really the most important points.

The Catena contains not a little which will not bear much pressure; but it also contains materials from which a strong chain may be constructed. If Papias "used testimonies" found in the first Epistle of John, and if the Presbyters<sup>1</sup> who were his contemporaries quoted from the Gospel, we have the earliest possible evidence for the existence and authority of the Johannine writings. For Papias was a "hearer of John" (Irenæus), perhaps lived with him (see Anast. Sin. on p. 59). See the Note on John at Ephesus, p. xlv.

We may be certain that Barnabas used the fourth Gospel. It scarcely needs Keim's powerful argument to this effect; the passages themselves make it pretty clear. There remains, of course, the question as to the date of Barnabas; and I do not think it can be put in the first century, but it can scarcely have been later than twenty or thirty years after John's death.

The expressions in Clement of Rome are too vague, and those in Ignatius of too uncertain date, to warrant our founding upon them. But it is not possible to pass over the clear words of Polycarp; and the theology and the tone of Hermas remind us of the fourth Gospel with a perpetual suggestiveness which isolated quotations cannot adequately represent.

Turning from the direct line of the Church, we have Basilides, A.D. 125, whose words seem proved to be those we find in Hippolytus. About the Clementine Homilies, there can no longer be any doubt as regards distinct quotation, now that Dressel has discovered the complete MS with the words of John ix. 20 emphatically used. There may well be raised the question of the date of this book, but it is rather strange to find doubt of its antiquity and value among those who impugn the fourth Gospel! All that the Tübingen scholars said of the great importance of the Clementines before Dressel's publication in 1853 is turned against them, now that the book witnesses for the Gospel they assailed. The Acts of Pilate has been so freely used by its copyists or possessors, that—like other apocryphal books—it is an insecure witness; and, while it may be mentioned, it cannot be pressed. The same is true of the Acts of John. See supra, p. cvii.

There are few things made more clear of late than the rightful enrolment of Justin Martyr among the witnesses for John's Gospel. There has been a growing appreciation of this fact, and the latest authors are the most explicit.<sup>1</sup>

That Heracleon and Ptolemaeus must be reckoned on the same side cannot be doubted. And the date of Heracleon makes the devotion of that learned Gnostic to John, as to a text-book, very significant. In this devotion he was not exceptional among his fellows. The earliest Gnostics in the second century give us not only quotations from the Gospel of John, and the first commentary upon it, but in the key-notes of their various systems (Marcion excepted) we find indubitable proofs of its influence. The ordinary teachers followed in the track of the Synoptists, but the Gnostics took up, in imitation of the fourth Gospel, those great problems of the relations of the Spiritual God and fallen man, of light and darkness, of life and death, of the world and the believer, of spirit and the body, which John has made so prominent.

The Muratorian fragment is as explicit as it can be. When we pass the middle of the century, and come to the works of Tatian, Athenagoras, and Theophilus (with a quotation by name), we are out of the region of controversy.<sup>2</sup> At the same time we are bound to remember in this connection that the evidence of Irenæus is not fairly estimated if we think of his date alone. The weight of what he says comes from his direct connection with John through Polycarp. It is inconceivable that one so learned and so intelligent could be mistaken in believing that his beloved master Polycarp was the disciple of the beloved Apostle of Jesus Christ.<sup>3</sup> Yet this is the paradox which Keim<sup>4</sup> set himself to establish, in attempting to overturn the long-accepted tradition of the Church, and to prove that the Apostle John was never in Ephesus. There is some examination of this elsewhere (see p. xlv). We may here note that he fixed the date of the Gospel at A.D. 110-117, and we may agree with Dr Samuel Davidson in his quaint confession that "Keim's date, A.D. 110-117, under Trajan, makes it exceedingly difficult to disprove Johannine authorship."<sup>5</sup>

The natural conclusion from this rapid review is that we have as early, if not as numerous, proofs of the existence of John's Gospel as of the existence of the Synoptists; and that in the whole stream of Christian thought during the second century, we have more indubitable proofs of its influence than of the influence of any other single book of the New Testament. This is the testimony of the Church and of the Heretics—given with a unanimity which is impressive. And what is there on the other side? There are said to have been some individuals in the end of the second century who refused to accept this book because of the unpalatable nature of its teaching regarding the Holy Spirit, and Epiphanius tells us of a sect or party in Lybia excited to opposition. They were not numerous, nor were they powerful; they did not rely on any external evidence; they are chiefly memorable because of the happy nickname (Ἀλογοι or Alogi) by which Epiphanius (who is very proud of it) hit them off as “irrational,” as well as rejecters of the Gospel of the Logos or Word of God.

From the second century until quite a recent date, scarcely a voice was ever lifted against the Johannine authorship. Luther was content to give up the rest of the New Testament if he had John, Romans, and 1 Peter. Schleiermacher, and all whom he influenced, held by this Gospel as the most precious spiritual teaching in Scripture. But a change came about sixty years ago. The solitary scholar (Bretschneider) who (1820) advanced among critical “probabilities” the idea that the book was not written by John, but by some other critic in the beginning or middle of the second century, was met with such firm opposition that he published his recantation of his suggested doubts. But his views were, nevertheless, soon after maintained by Strauss, and since his ‘Life of Jesus’ was published (1834-35), the fourth Gospel has been the battle-ground of criticism. A much greater Würtemberger than Strauss—F. C. Baur—maintained that the Gospel was written and started into great popularity about A.D. 160. He ascribed the popularity to the fact that the author had something to say that suited everybody,—one party of heretics finding their views of the Holy Spirit, another their cosmogony, another their opinions on the Paschal controversy, while Paul's followers found their master's principles carried out further and more fully than by themselves, and the whole Catholic Church rejoiced in the exposition of Christianity as the one absolute religion. In all this Baur did not take into account that every party would have been sure to denounce the new book for what it contained contrary to their special tenets. But, moreover, the sufficient answer is the proof that the Gospel was actually in use long before the time at which he supposes it to have been written. Keim pushed it back to the days of Trajan, and all Christian tradition (see Irenæus on p. 183) vouches for John's surviving till that reign. There is no possibility of a book claiming to be John's being written by some one else, and palmed off upon the Church as his. There would have risen up a host of eager disciples to deny that their revered master ever wrote the book.

Thus much may be said on the external evidence and the history of the controversy.

But in course of the controversy men's minds have turned to the contents of the Gospel, and have analysed them with microscopic care.<sup>1</sup> Though it does not fall within the plan of this book to deal at any length with this aspect of the question, it may not be out of place to indicate briefly what appear to be some results of the discussion.

1. One result has been to dispose of the idea that the book was written by a secretary (even though Weizsäcker (1864) and Ewald (1861) lend it their support), or by a committee of John's congregation, or by any other than an eye-witness. In the first chapter, the passing over of the disciples from the Baptist to Jesus, and the many minute notes of time (vv. 35, 39, 43), are recorded as by one who was recalling the most memorable events of his own youth. The minute remembrance of time and detailed incidents, and the familiar acquaintance with the home and haunts of those whom he mentions (as of Philip in i. 43), are seen throughout the book. See the time of the marriage, and the number of firkins (ii. 1, 6); the parenthetical mention of the other boats (vi. 23); the apparently superfluous naming of Ephraim (xi. 54); the minute account of the coming of the Greeks, though no notice is taken of the direct result of their application (xii. 20); the many little touches of association with John the Baptist (vi. 59, x. 40); the spot of each of two notable incidents (viii. 20, x. 23), &c. When such things as these meet our eye, we see the eye-witness himself mingling little details which have no significance, except that he did remember them, with the momentous portions of his narrative; but we do not see things which it would occur to a reporter to record, or which, indeed, it would be natural for him to keep in mind. These little touches establish the truth of the Evangelist's claim: "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us: and we beheld His glory;" or in the beginning of his first Epistle (for it cannot be doubted that the same man wrote it), "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you."

The remarkable sketches of character are evidently the work of one who had known in daily intercourse the men and women of whom he writes. We come to know Andrew and Philip and Nathanael and Thomas, as well as we know Peter through the other evangelists; and of Peter himself we learn also much that is new and touching. Martha and Mary, and Mary of Magdala, acquire a new distinctness of outline. The character of Nicodemus, in his progress towards the truth, and that of Pilate, who seems to tremble and hesitate even when he is fixed on the historic canvas, are sketched with the conscious power of a close observer of them both.

In the same connection we may notice the touches of autobiography. The continued notice of the Baptist has been often pointed out as showing that the writer was one of the two disciples who passed over from him to Jesus (i. 37). It is said that, after the fall of Jerusalem, some of John the Baptist's disciples aimed at being a permanent sect, and that this Gospel, by one of themselves, was written to remind them of their master's real relation to the Redeemer of men. In this Gospel he is only called "John." Others might need to distinguish him from the son of Zebedee; but when that son of Zebedee himself was writing, he did not think of there being two of the name. And the Evangelist is evidently one of the disciples whose slowness of heart he sorrowfully recalls (xvi. 17; ii. 17-22). The scenes at the successive meetings after the Resurrection are so described as to show indirectly the character and position of the writer.

2. We see further that the author was a Jew of Palestine. His whole tone of thought is formed on the Old Testament. That Hebrew of Hebrews, Paul himself, was not more a Hebrew than this writer. The Old Testament is the law (vii. 19), and also a prophecy of Christ (v. 29-46). The figures and types of the Old Testament are more constantly reproduced in this Gospel than in any other book of the New Testament save the Apocalypse. Jesus is the true temple (ii. 19), the true brazen serpent (iii. 14), the good Shepherd (x. 11), the true manna, the living water, the Paschal lamb. Only one who had breathed the atmosphere of Israel could have told, as this evangelist tells, how the coming of Messiah was the centre of all Jewish thought. He is at home in Jewish customs and arrangements, domestic, sacred, and national (vii. 37, x. 22, xix. 31), and in Jewish ritual and the controversies which sprang from it (iii. 25, vii. 22). No other writer has so sharply limned the religious condition of the ruling party in Israel, with "their ossified learning and their raw realism" (Wittichen), their fanatical theory and inconsistent practice (vii. 34, vii. 15, viii. 32, iii. 4, vi. 15, vii. 32, &c.) He has walked on the roads and been tossed on the seas of Palestine, and his step is easy and sure when he is guiding his readers among them (iv. 6, xi. 18, vi. 19-21). His simple sentences, and his repetition of thought, show that "in the style of John the clothing alone is Greek, the body is Hebrew."<sup>1</sup> None but one who was a Jew, as well as an eye-witness, could have entered into the very soul of the nation, so as to represent all the various types of national character in the dramatic dialogues which are so frequent in the book. The Baptist, Nicodemus, Nathanael, the blind man, the priests in the temple, describe themselves in a few words.

3. Further, the author, though a Jew, was an enlightened disciple of Christ. The Jews are still the flock of God, but Christ has other sheep not of that fold. "He died not for that nation only." "Salvation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth (iv. 22, 23). For 1800 years we have been advancing into the meaning of those words; and even now we are only learning how much they mean.

It is thus that the use of the term "the Jews" is to be explained. As he looks back, the disciple sees that it was on account of misguided national feeling the opposition to his Master was so intense and so prolonged; and the most prominent features before his mind, as he recalls the Incarnate Son of God in Israel, are on the one hand Jesus endeavouring to exalt the nation, and on the other hand the great mass of that nation—the Jews—blindly resisting Him. This is strikingly brought out (vii. 35) when the Jews are amazed at the idea of His leaving Jerusalem to teach His brethren scattered among the heathen, and with scorn suggest the supremely ridiculous idea, that He would perhaps even teach the Greeks! "He came unto His own (τὰ ἴδια), and His own (οἱ ἴδιοι) received Him not."<sup>1</sup>

4. This leads us to notice the calm authority with which the Evangelist writes. I confess to being unable to doubt that the writer had a full knowledge of the synoptic narratives. The very first chapter, with its sudden introduction of both Messiah and the Baptist, would be unintelligible unless on the supposition that readers of his Gospel were already familiar with the synoptic writers. But when he had them before him, nothing but a full persuasion of his independent right to speak could have led him to make a book so unlike theirs. There is an evident and intentional supplementing of the other narratives at the outset (iii. 24), for they begin the ministry of Jesus at the time when John was cast into prison (Mark i. 14). He explains them sometimes. The words, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often," &c. (Mat. xxiii. 37), suggest the repeated visits of which he alone tells us. He sometimes needs them to explain his narrative: thus he alludes to many miracles, and to crowds that came, though of those miracles he has not said a word before (ii. 23, iv. 45, x. 37, xii. 37, &c.) In simple consciousness of a right to speak, he sets himself to add to what men already knew of that life which he had seen.

5. He writes with a definite purpose. There has been much controversy as to what that purpose was. But he has told us; and his own words characterise his Gospel as one might expect that they would

<sup>1</sup> He speaks of "your law" (viii. 17, x. 34) to remind them how impossible it was for them to disown the authority to which He appealed.

(xx. 31). He reports what will show that Jesus was the Incarnate Son of God. We know that at the end of the first century this was a needed counteractive of prevailing tendencies to error.

A very old tradition (Clem. Alex., see p. 75) says that John saw in the synoptic narratives the body of the Gospel, and that he wished to show its spirit. And this is true. He assumes that Christ's life is already known: but he writes for a Church which could now "bear" more than when the truth was first spoken and written.

It thus came to pass that he made incidents subordinate to speeches. We are not told directly what was the effect on Nicodemus of the interview by night,—the teaching regarding salvation by regeneration engrossing the writer's thoughts. Neither are we told whether the Greeks who came to see Jesus did see and hear Him,—the attention of the writer being fixed on the Saviour's doctrine of self-sacrifice. It is as though the ordinary incidents were sufficiently known, while comparatively little had been heard of the Saviour's higher teaching.

For it is higher teaching, and therefore parables almost entirely disappear. The Synoptists tell us, that while those who were low in the spiritual scale could not understand more than the parables, the disciples heard in private the explanation of those parables. Almost all the discourses in the fourth Gospel are addressed either to instructed Jews or to sympathising disciples. If we compare the fourth chapter of this Gospel with the explanation of the sower and of the tares in Mat. xiii., we find a wonderful resemblance. The parable in both cases becomes a metaphor worked into direct teaching and statement. In some other cases in the fourth Gospel where ordinary hearers were addressed, the circumstances at once suggested and explained the figures which Christ employed. Thus it was as natural to speak to Paschal pilgrims (chap. vi.) of food provided by God, as to tell the woman by the well (chap. iv.) of living water.

If, then, the author of the fourth Gospel was an eye-witness of the scenes he describes, and describes them so as to give us incidentally his autobiography;—if we learn from his narrative that he was a Jew of Palestine, and an enlightened disciple of Christ; if we see that he writes as one possessed of independent authority, and writes with a definite purpose; if we further learn that he was a favoured disciple of Jesus, who wrote after the other narratives had been for some time in the possession of the Church,—we are shut up to the conclusion that he was John, the son of Zebedee, who survived the other Apostles, and lived until the truth was menaced by errors which this Gospel was written to counteract. This is in accordance with the old belief of the Church, as was proved by the Catena of external evidence.

There are, however, some other points which we can best notice in connection with the ordinary objections to this conclusion. It is said that—

- (a) "The discourses are longer in the fourth Gospel than in the others." But this is not so. The Sermon on the Mount, and the last address to the general crowd of auditors,—both found in St Matthew,—are longer than the discourses in our Gospel. The real difference lies in the greater number of incidents recorded by the Synoptists.
- (β) "The doctrine taught is different." But the difference is only in detail and fulness. The whole doctrine of John as to the mystery of the relations of Father and Son is contained in Mat. xi. 25-30. And the closing counsels recorded by John before the Redeemer's death may be found condensed in Mat. xxviii. 18.
- (γ) "The form of Christ's speeches is not the same." It is true that in the Synoptists they are usually brief, pointed, epigrammatic; in John usually (not always) expanded and more connected. This may partly come from the fact that the Synoptists describe the home life and the teaching in Galilee, while John records the intercourse with doctors in Jerusalem, and with instructed disciples. But I think that there is another consideration of more importance. It is admitted by every one that in all the Gospels all the discourses are much abridged. But how do men give to others a fair idea of what a speaker says when they do not give all he said? There are two ways. One is, to report verbatim portions or passages of his address; the other is, to give an outline of the whole without any one sentence being fully reproduced, though every expression may be (not necessarily is) what the speaker used. Now the Synoptists report by extract, John reports in outline.
- (δ) "The doctrine of the Logos is peculiar to John." But that doctrine is confined to the Preface. It is avowedly the historian's own.
- (ε) "The Greek of the fourth Gospel is pure." It is. But John was never a poor man; he had a house in Jerusalem, and must have been accustomed to speak Greek in the capital all his days.<sup>1</sup> His Greek is easy and natural; but it is the Greek of an educated Hebrew. It is less Hebrew than the Apocalypse; but on the supposition of common authorship, the interval between the writing of the two works had been spent in the Greek city of Ephesus. Cato at 80 learned Greek, and Plutarch almost as late in life learned Latin. (See Disraeli's 'Curiosities of Literature,' vol. i. p. 98). Jerome acquired Hebrew after he was 30; and David Livingstone learned a wild tongue in Africa, and forgot his own, after he had passed middle age.

- (s) "John never names himself as the author." It is true ; but there can be little doubt that he describes himself as the "disciple whom Jesus loved." All we learn of the fragrant old age of John in Ephesus<sup>1</sup> makes it likely that this descriptive title had become a proper name of the venerable saint, and it was only natural that he should use it to add authority to his great and final testimony to the Master on whose bosom he had lain. Sometimes one thinks that the egotism of the ambitious spirit that had once asked, or prompted his mother to ask, the distinction of sitting with his brother on either hand of the Lord when He came into His kingdom, had been mellowed into the old man's delight in claiming,—as he did claim, and that with truth,—when he looked back through seventy years to the life of Jesus of Nazareth, that it was he who had been nearest and dearest of all to the Heart that was broken by the world's sorrow and sin. If this be still egotism, it is not the less a touch of human nature which makes us feel John to be of our kindred. There was only One in whom was no fault at all.
- (ζ) "The Jesus of the fourth Gospel is not the same as He of whom the Synoptists tell." I think the best answer to this is found in the witness of Christendom through all the centuries. All believing men have felt that the four narratives describe one life—that of the "God-Man" (Origen). The Church of Christ was not built on an abstraction, or on an idea, but on a Personal Saviour whom it has known through each one of the four Gospels. And the Church has always recognised that the Saviour must have been such a One as the fourth Gospel describes,—dwelling in a light and in a shadow which never rested on any other.

1. THE SYRIAC VERSION (PESHITO).

THE Peshito (or 'simple') version of the Scripture seems to have been from a very early age in common use throughout the regions where Syriac was spoken. Notices in the New Testament show that Antioch was at the first one of the most important centres of Christian influence; and that the organising power of the faith in Jesus so bound together the community of believers in that city as to lead to their receiving the distinctive name of Christians (Acts xi. 19. 26). The early legend of Abgar, Toparch of Edessa, writing to Jesus Christ and receiving an answer with the promise of an Apostle's visit (Eus. H. E. I. 13), shows how soon the Gospel was understood to have taken root in those regions. It is now generally believed that at least from the second century until the present day there has been used by Syriac-speaking Christians that version of the N. T. which is known as the Peshito. Scattered and hostile Churches have the same book: MSS of all ages contain it in substantially the same form. Its list of Books is the same as our present Canon, save that it wants the Apocalypse, Jude, 2 Peter, and 2 & 3 John. This may be regarded as the Testimony of the Syrian Church in the second century.<sup>1</sup>

2. THE OLD LATIN VERSION

is also of very remote antiquity. It was the Bible of the large and vigorous African Church. It appears in the writings of the Translator of Irenaeus. It had been so long current before Tertullian's time that its phrases moulded popular speech and Christian thought in his day. The translation of λόγος in John's Gospel by Sermo was a proof of its rude simplicity which rather distressed him. Its Canon did not originally contain Hebrews (though it had been enriched by it before Tertullian's time); 2 Peter was also wanting; and the testimony of the greater part of the MSS is to the effect that James was not in it.<sup>2</sup> This therefore is the testimony of the African Church of the second century. While the Roman Church was using Greek, the African shores of the Mediterranean were inhabited by a Latin-speaking Christian people whose Canon was (save as regards Hebrews, 2 Peter, and probably James) the same as our own.

Evangeliorum <sup>6</sup>Joannes ex discipulis. Cohortantibus condiscipulis et episcopis suis dixit: Conjejunate mihi hodie triduum, et quid cuique fuerit revelatum alterutrum nobis enarremus. Eadem nocte revelatum Andreae ex apostolis, ut recognoscentibus cunctis, Joannes suo nomine cuncta describeret. <sup>7</sup>Et ideo licet varia singulis Evangeliorum libris principia doceantur nihil tamen differt credentium fidei, cum uno ac principali spiritu declarata sint in omnibus omnia de nativitate, de passione, de resurrectione, de conversatione cum discipulis suis, et de gemino ejus adventu. <sup>8</sup>Primum in humilitate despectus, quod fuit secundum potestate regali praeclarum, quod futurum est. Quid ergo mirum, si Joannes tam constanter singula etiam in Epistolis suis proferat dicens in <sup>9</sup>semetipso: Quae vidimus oculis nostris, et auribus audivimus, et manus nostrae palpaverunt, haec scripsimus vobis? Sic enim non solum visorem, sed et auditorem, sed et scriptorem omnium mirabilium Domini per ordinem profitetur. Acta autem omnium apostolorum sub uno libro scripta sunt. Lucas <sup>10</sup>"optime Theophile" comprehendit, <sup>11</sup>quia sub praesentia ejus singula gerebantur, sicut et <sup>12</sup>semote passionem Petri evidenter declarat, sed et profectionem Pauli ab urbe ad Spaniam proficiscentis. Epistolae autem Pauli, quae, a quo loco, vel qua ex causa directae sint, volentibus intelligere ipsae declarant. <sup>6</sup> Joannes ex discipulis: to distinguish him from the Baptist before named. Jerome gives a similar account.

<sup>9</sup> Semetipsum (Westcott). Comp. 1 John i. 10. It may intimate a contrast between John's personal testimony in his Epistle, and the conjoined testimony which the Gospel is here said to be. Comp. John xxi. 24 but also xix. 35. The quotation in the text is from 1 John i. 1, 3, not verbally.

turarum, sed et principium earum esse Christum intimans, prolixius scripsit; de quibus singulis <sup>14</sup>necesse est a nobis disputari; cum ipse beatus Apostolus Paulus sequens prodecessoris sui Joannis ordinem, nonnisi nominatim septem ecclesiis scribat ordine tali: Ad Corinthios prima, ad Ephesios secunda, ad Philippenses tertia, ad Colossenses quarta, ad Galatas quinta, ad Thessalonicenses sexta, ad Romanos septima. Verum Corinthiis, et Thessalonicensibus licet pro correptione iteretur, una tamen per omnem orbem terrae ecclesia diffusa esse denoscitur. Et Joannes enim in Apocalypsi licet septem ecclesiis scribat, tamen omnibus dicit. Verum ad Philemonem unam, et ad Titum unam, et ad Timotheum <sup>15</sup>duas pro affectu et dilectione; in honore tamen ecclesiae <sup>16</sup>catholicae, in ordinatione ecclesiasticae disciplinae sanctificatae sunt. Fertur etiam ad <sup>17</sup>Laodicenses, alia ad <sup>17</sup>Alexandrinis, Pauli nomine fictae ad haeresem <sup>17</sup>Marcionis, et alia plura, quae in catholicam ecclesiam recipi non <sup>18</sup>potest; fel enim cum melle misceri non congruit. Epistola sane Judae, et superscripti <sup>19</sup>Joannis <sup>15</sup>duas in catholica habentur; et <sup>20</sup>Sapientia ab amicis Salomonis in honorem ipsius scripta. Apocalypses etiam Joannis, et Petri, tantum recipimus, quam quidam ex nostris legi in ecclesia nolunt. Pastorem vero <sup>21</sup>nuperrime

<sup>19</sup> Joannis. It is doubtful whether all the three of John are here alluded to, the second being regarded as part of the first; or whether he regards himself as having quoted the first already.

<sup>20</sup> et Sapientia. Some read ut, but in that case the allusion or comparison is obscure. It is better to suppose that there is a gap in the original MS. "Wisdom" was a name given to "Proverbs" as well as to the apocryphal book "Wisdom of Solomon." (See Treg.)

<sup>21</sup> nuperrime, &c. Upon this passage the conclusions as to the date of the fragment are based. Origen supposes that the "Shepherd" may be written by the contemporary of Paul: but the statement in the text is explicit.

temporibus nostris in Urbe Roma Hermas conscripsit, sedente cathedra Urbis Romae ecclesiae Pio Episcopo fratre ejus; et ideo legi cum quidem oportet, se publicare vero in ecclesia populo, neque inter Prophetas, completum numero, neque inter Apostolos, in finem temporum potest. <sup>22</sup>Arsinoi autem, seu Valentini, vel Mitiadis nihil in totum recipimus. Qui etiam novum Psalmorum librum Marcioni conscripserunt una cum Basilide Assianum Catafrygum constitutorem . . .

4. THE CANON OF ORIGEN.

(Euseb. H. E. VI. 25.)

After giving Origen's Catalogue of the "22 Books in use among the Hebrews," Eusebius says that Origen proceeds:

Ἐν δὲ τῇ πρώτῃ τῶν εἰς τὸ κατὰ Ματθαῖον, τὸν ἐκκλησιαστικὸν φυλάττων κανόνα, μόνα τέσσαρα εἰδέναι ἐναγγέλια μαρτύρεται, ὧδὲ πως γράφων·

Ἰερουσαλὴμ καὶ κύκλῳ μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικικοῦ, οὐδὲ πάσαις ἔγραψεν αἷς ἐδίδαξεν ἐκκλησίαις, ἀλλὰ καὶ αἷς ἔγραψεν, ὀλίγους στίχους ἐπέστειλε. Πέτρος δὲ, ἐφ' ᾧ οἰκοδομεῖται ἡ Χριστοῦ ἐκκλησία, ἥς πύλαι ἄδου οὐ κατισχύσουσι, μίαν ἐπιστολὴν ὁμολογουμένην καταλέλοιπεν. Ἔστω δὲ καὶ δευτέραν· ἀμφιβάλλεται γάρ. Τί δεῖ περὶ τοῦ ἀναπεσόντος ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος λέγειν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, Ἰωάννου, ὅς εὐαγγέλιον ἐν καταλέλοιπεν, ὁμολογῶν δύνασθαι τοσαῦτα ποιεῖν ἃ οὐδὲ ὁ κόσμος χωρῆσαι ἐδύνατο; Ἐγραψε δὲ καὶ τὴν Ἀποκάλυψιν, κελευσθεὶς σιωπῆσαι καὶ μὴ γράφαι τὰς τῶν ἐπὶ τὰ βροντῶν φωνάς. Καταλέλοιπε δὲ καὶ ἐπιστολὴν πᾶν ὀλίγων στίχων. Ἔστω δὲ καὶ δευτέραν καὶ τρίτην· ἐπεὶ οὐ πάντες φασὶ γνησίους εἶναι ταύτας· πλὴν οὐκ εἰσὶ στίχων ἀμφοτέραι ἑκατόν.

Ὅτι ὁ χαρακτὴρ τῆς λέξεως τῆς πρὸς Ἑβραίους ἐπιστολῆς, οὐκ ἔχει τὸ ἐν λόγῳ ιδιωτικὸν τοῦ ἀποστόλου, ὁμολογήσαντος ἑαυτὸν ιδιώτην εἶναι τῷ λόγῳ, τουτέστι τῇ φράσει, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἡ ἐπιστολὴ συνθέσει τῆς λέξεως Ἑλληνικωτέρα, πᾶς ὁ ἐπιστάμενος κρίνειν φράσεως διαφορὰς, ὁμολογῆσαι ἂν. Πάλιν τε αὖ ὅτι τὰ νοήματα τῆς ἐπιστολῆς θαυμάσιά ἐστι, καὶ οὐ δευτέρα τῶν ἀποστολικῶν γραμμάτων, καὶ τοῦτο ἂν συμφῆσαι εἶναι ἀληθές, πᾶς ὁ προσέχων τῇ ἀναγνώσει τῇ ἀποστολικῇ.

Τούτοις μεθ' ἕτερα ἐπιφέρει λέγων·

Ἐγὼ δὲ ἀποφαινόμενος εἵπομ' ἂν, ὅτι τὰ μὲν νοήματα τοῦ ἀποστόλου ἔστιν, ἡ δὲ φράσις καὶ ἡ σύνθεσις ἀπομνημονεύσαντός τινος<sup>3</sup> τὰ εἰρημένα ὑπὸ τοῦ διδασκάλου. Εἴ τις οὖν ἐκκλησία ἔχει ταύτην τὴν ἐπιστολὴν ὡς Παύλου, αὕτη εὐδοκίμειτω καὶ ἐπὶ τούτῳ. Οὐ γὰρ εἰκὴ οἱ ἀρχαῖοι αἰδοῦντες ὡς Παύλου αὐτὴν παραδεδώκασι. Τίς δὲ ὁ γράψας τὴν ἐπιστολὴν, τὸ μὲν ἀληθές θεὸς οἶδεν. Ἡ δὲ εἰς ἡμᾶς φθάσασα ἱστορία, ὑπὸ τινων μὲν λεγόντων, ὅτι Κλήμης ὁ γενόμενος ἐπίσκοπος Ῥωμαίων ἔγραψε τὴν ἐπιστολὴν, ὑπὸ τινων δὲ, ὅτι Λουκιᾶς ὁ γράψας τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον καὶ τὰς Πράξεις.

<sup>4</sup> The testimony of Origen in those passages is to the following books of the N. T.: The four Gospels (with notes as to the apostolic sanction to Mark and Luke), the Pauline Epp. (not named in detail), the Apocalypse, 1 John, 1 Peter, and (as not accepted by all) 2 & 3 John, and 2 Peter. He refers also to Acts. The Epp. of James and Jude are referred to elsewhere. (See under 'James' and 'Jude'.) His discussion of the authorship of "Hebrews" is noteworthy.

<sup>1</sup> The views of Eusebius on the Canon as a whole are in this passage. His opinions on the Gospels (H. E. III. 24) and on the Epistles (H. E. III. 3) are given elsewhere. Here he seems to make two catalogues; the first dividing Books into three classes: ὁμολογούμενα, ἀντιλεγόμενα, νόθα; the second (or explanatory list) adding a lower class, the deliberate forgeries published by heretics, and scarcely giving a place to νόθα. To the first class belong the 4 Gospels: the Acts: the Epp. of Paul: 1 John, 1 Peter: and (if it seem good) the Apocalypse. To the second belong James, Jude, 2 Peter, 2 & 3 John. In the third the only book of our Canon is the Apocal. "if it seem good" so to rank it. In H. E. III. 3 (quoted afterwards) he reckons 1 Peter: 14 of Paul (though the Roman Church counts Hebrews not Pauline). Of the chief non-canonical books we shall treat afterwards. The ἐμολ. or accepted books are called in the second list ἀληθεῖς, ἁπλάστοι, ἀνωμολογημένοι γραφαί: the ἀντιλεγ. are defined as οὐκ ἐνδιάκηχοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀντιλεγόμενοι, ὅμως δὲ παρὰ πλείστοις τῶν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν γινωσκόμεναι; the third class, νόθα, is apparently not repeated, unless it be obscurely glanced at when he says αὐτὰς τε ταύτας, but instead of dwelling upon it he now adds the heretical books. By νόθα, however, he evidently means books that had no right to be in the Canon whether they be, or be not, the works of the men whose names they bear. The Acts of Paul and the Apocalypse of Peter he probably regarded as spurious; the Shepherd of Hermas may have been really the work of its reputed author; but all these are νόθα, uncanonical writings. See H. E. III. 3. By some (see Credn. Gesch. § 89 and Hilg. Einl. p. 116) this Catalogue is taken as containing two classes—the accepted and the disputed books—the latter being subdivided according to the various grades of acceptance (or of opposition) in the Church. By others (see Reuss Gesch. § 314) the classes are supposed to be three—ἐμολ., ἀντιλεγ. (νόθα) and πρὸς τῶν αἱρετ. προφερ. Eusebius probably did not rigidly define to himself the meaning of νόθα even in this passage: and elsewhere (H. E. II. 23) he says the Ep. of James νοθεύεται, and explains that both James and Jude have few primitive testimonies in their favour. In the same way he elsewhere calls Clem. Ep. I. to the Corr. ἐμολ., i.e., undoubtedly Clement's work; but ἀντιλ. as far as canonicity is concerned (H. E. III. 16, 38. VI. 13).

Probably the oldest MS of the N. T. and certainly dating from as early a time as the beginning of the fourth century. Its want of the Ammonian sections and Eusebian Canons seems to point to a date before Eusebius brought these into vogue;<sup>1</sup> and the form of its letters and peculiar readings tend to the same result. It is unfortunately defective from Heb. ix. 14. Its Books of the N. T. (it has the O. T. complete save parts of Genesis and Psalms) are Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, James, Peter (2), John (3), Jude, Romans, Corinthians (2), Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians (2), Hebrews . . . .

7. CODEx SINAITICUS (Cod. s),

discovered by Tischendorf in the convent of St Catharine on Mount Sinai, and published in 1862, contains (in addition to much of the O. T.) the New Testament as in our Canon in the following order: Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Romans, Corinthians (2), Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians (2), Hebrews, Timothy (2), Titus, Philemon, Acts, James, Peter (2), John (3), Apocalypse.

Immediately after the Apocalypse, beginning on the same page with its conclusion, is the Epistle of Barnabas complete, followed by a considerable portion of the Shepherd of Hermas. The paging of the original sheets shows that some leaves of the MS which came between Barnabas and Hermas are lost. This MS dates from about the middle of the fourth century. It has been supposed that it may be one of the 50 copies prepared by Eusebius at the order of the Emperor Constantine, but there are objections to this view.

Ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ περὶ μὲν τῶν αἰρετικῶν ἐμνήσθημεν, ὡς νεκρῶν, περὶ δὲ ἱμῶν ὡς ἐχόντων πρὸς σωτηρίαν τὰς θείας γραφάς· καὶ φοβοῦμαι μήπως, ὡς ἔγραψεν Κορινθίους Παῦλος, ὀλίγοι τῶν ἀκεραίων ἀπὸ τῆς ἀλλότιτος καὶ τῆς ἐγνόητος πληθυσῶσιν ἀπὸ τῆς

<sup>1</sup> The Alexandrian Church was the most learned in the world, especially learned in Astronomy; and the Council of Nicaea imposed on its bishop as a duty to determine for Christendom (as it had been his custom to determine for his own diocese) the exact day for the celebration of each successive Easter. The result of the reckoning was not only published to all the towns and monasteries within the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Alexandria, but was also made known to the Western Church through the Bishop of Rome, and to the Syrian Church through the Bishop of Antioch. By fixing the date of Easter, this yearly Epistle fixed the dates of all the Christian festivals of the year. From an early period the letters had been of growing repute as Episcopal Pastorals; but the Nicene decree made them officially binding. Athanasius was only a Deacon when that decree was made, but he heard it given forth, and for more than 40 years (329-373) amid all his occupations, even in his exile, he sent his "Festal Letter" to the Christian world. A part of one of those letters is given in the text; and it may be regarded as not only the opinion of Athanasius himself, but an official announcement of the common conclusions of Christendom on the subject of the Canon. He refers to the number of heretical books which were current. He points out that they were apt to deceive because they falsely claimed names kindred to those of the true books. The true books are fountains of salvation. He enumerates the books of the O. T. (Esther is omitted, and there are apocryphal additions to Jeremiah), and his N. T. list is exactly that of our Canon, "to which no one may add, and from which nothing may be taken away." But there are other books, of a lower grade, which neophytes may read with profit: the Wisdom of Solomon (often quoted by Athanasius elsewhere), Sirach, Esther, Judith, Tobit, the Teaching of the Apostles, and Hermas. Far below them—and named only to be denounced—are the apocryphal books made by heretics, false in title and in date, constructed to deceive the unsuspicious. Many of the books reckoned in Athanasius's second class were ordinarily read in churches at the time—read for instruction, or quoted by preachers and writers—yet not as Canonical Scripture. No doubt, however, can be entertained that this practice led to confusion, which Athanasius in his letter sought to reduce to order. It was not a task without difficulty,—τόλμη he calls it. He himself elsewhere quotes Hermas and the Teaching of the Apostles, but never so as to contradict this solemn statement. We may add that this Epistle is admitted to be genuine, and that its testimony to the sacred books is to the same effect as all that we learn from the history of the Nicene Council and from contemporary quotations. (See Euseb. H. E. V. 25; VII. 20; Credner, Gesch. § 94.) Eusebius refers to Dionysius's letters (VII. 20. 22) and quotes largely from them, showing the high esteem in which they were held. The Festal letters seem to have been collected for reference and use from the very first; those of Dionysius, Athanasius, Theophilus, and Cyril being specially memorable. This by Athanasius does not exist in full, but the part on the Canon is frequently quoted. Of the greater part of it a Syriac translation was found along with other Festal letters in the Nitrian MSS in the British Museum. There is a German Translation of the Festal Letters by Larsow (1852), a Latin one by Mai (1854), and an English one (1854) "Library of Fathers." Athanasius appears to have written 45 letters; and most of those which have come down to us contain not only instructions as to their proper subject, but also (prefixed to the paragraph containing the computation) exhortations to steadfastness in Christian doctrine and practice. The text is after Migne's Edition (1857), vol. ii. p. 1436. See there the prefatory account, p. 1339 (after Mai).

9. SYNOPSIS ASCRIBED TO ATHANASIUS.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This Synopsis is not regarded as genuine. It is not mentioned by any ancient author as the work of Athanasius. Jerome is silent upon it. It does not agree in its list of books either of the Old Testament or of the New with those Καὶ ἔστι τῆς μὲν Παλαιᾶς Διαθήκης ταῦτα· . . . [Here follow the Books of the O. T. including the Apocrypha (which however are distinguished as μὴ κανονιζόμενα), and making two of Esdras.] Τὰ δὲ τῆς Καινῆς Διαθήκης, πάλιν ὀρισμένα τε καὶ κεκανονισμένα βιβλία, ταῦτα· (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, Seven Catholic Epp., Paul's Epp. 14 in number [Hebrews being named before the Pastoral Epp.], Apocalypse.) Τοσαῦτα καὶ τὰ τῆς Καινῆς Διαθήκης βιβλία τὰ γε κανονιζόμενα, καὶ τῆς πίστεως ἡμῶν οἷονεὶ ἀποστολικά ἢ ἄγκυρα καὶ ἐρείσματα· ὥς παρ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἀποστόλων τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τῶν καὶ συγγενομένων ἐκείνῳ καὶ ἐπ' αὐτοῦ μαθητευθέντων, γραφέντα καὶ ἐκτεθέντα. Ἐπεὶ τοί γε ὕστερον κατὰ τὴν ἐκείνων ἀκολουθίαν καὶ συμφωνίαν ἄλλα μυρία καὶ ἀναρίθμητα βιβλία ἐξεπονήθησαν ἐπὶ τῶν κατὰ καιροὺς μεγάλων καὶ σοφωτάτων θεοφρόνων Πατέρων εἰς μαρτυρίαν τῶν προλαβόντων καὶ διασώτισιν· περὶ ὧν οὐκ ἦν λόγος, ὥς παμπόλλων καὶ ὁρίστων, καὶ ἅμα πάντων τῆς αὐτῆς ἀκολουθίας τοῖς παλαιοῖς τοῦτοις ἐχομένων, καὶ τὰ αὐτὰ ἐξηγοιμένων καὶ αὐτῶν καὶ διασαφούντων. (Then follow detailed notices of the several books of Scripture, after which the author speaks of the Apocrypha and says), Τῆς Νέας πάλιν Διαθήκης ἀντιλεγόμενα ταῦτα· Περίοδοι Πέτρον, Περίοδοι Ἰωάννον, Περίοδοι Θωμᾶ, Εὐαγγέλιον κατὰ Θωμᾶ, Διδαχὴ ἀποστόλων, Κλημέντια, ἐξ ὧν μετεφράσθησαν ἐκλεγέντα τὰ ἀληθέστερα καὶ θεόπνευστα. Ταῦτα τὰ ἀγνωσκόμενα.

Ταῦτα πάντα ἐξετέθησαν μὲν ὅσον πρὸς εἰδίσιν, παραγεγραμμένα δὲ εἰςὶ πάντως καὶ νόθα, καὶ ἀπόβλητα. Καὶ οὐδὲν τοῦτων, τῶν ἀποκρίφων μάλιστα, ἔγκριτον ἢ ἐπωφελές, ἐξαιρέτως τῆς Νέας Διαθήκης· ἀλλὰ πάντα δίχα τῶν ἀνωτέρω διαληφθέντων, καὶ ἐγκριθέντων παρὰ τοῖς παλαιοῖς σοφοῖς καὶ πατράσιν, ἀποκρηγῆς μᾶλλον ἢ ἀναγνώσεως ὥς ἀληθῶς ἄξια· τὰ τε ἄλλα, καὶ αὐτὰ τὰ καλούμενα ἐν αὐτοῖς Εὐαγγέλια, ἐκτὸς τῶν παραδοθέντων ἡμῖν τεσσάρων τοῦτων. Εὐαγγέλια γὰρ τέσσαρα ἐθέσπισαν ἡμῖν given in the previous extract from the Paschal letter. Among other points of difference we may notice that the Synopsis does not mention Hermas, and does mention the Clementines—in both respects being the opposite of the Festal Letter. It has been attempted to find an allusion to this in a passage in Athanasius, "Apologia ad Constantium Imp.," p. 236, when he speaks of sending πυκτία τῶν Σείων γραφῶν. But πυκτία cannot mean a Synopsis. (See Migne, Proleg. p. CLXXVI.) The Synopsis is supposed to be as late as the 9th century. The text is abridged from Migne, vol. iv. p. 283, &c. <sup>4</sup>

Τέσσαρα γὰρ εἶδε Χερουβίμ οὗτος ὁ προφήτης· τὸ ἐν ὁμοίον ἀνθρώπων, τουτέστι τὸ κατὰ Ματθαῖον Εὐαγγέλιον· τὸ δειότερον ὁμοίον μόσχου, τουτέστι τὸ κατὰ Μάρκον Εὐαγγέλιον· τὸ ἄλλο ὁμοίον λέοντι, τουτέστι τὸ κατὰ Λουκᾶν Εὐαγγέλιον· τὸ δὲ τέταρτον ὁμοίον ἀετῷ, τουτέστι τὸ κατὰ Ἰωάννην Εὐαγγέλιον. Τὸ δὲ κατὰ Μάρκον Εὐαγγέλιον ὑπηγορεύθη μὲν ὑπὸ Πέτρου τοῦ ἀποστόλου, ἐν Ῥώμῃ, ἐξεδόθη δὲ ὑπὸ Μάρκου τοῦ μακαρίου ἀποστόλου, καὶ ἐκινήθη ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ καὶ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, καὶ ἐν Πενταπόλει, καὶ Λιβύῃ.

Τὸ δὲ κατὰ Λουκᾶν Εὐαγγέλιον ὑπηγορεύθη μὲν ὑπὸ Παύλου τοῦ ἀποστόλου, συνεγράφη δὲ καὶ ἐξεδόθη ὑπὸ Λουκᾶ τοῦ μακαρίου ἀποστόλου καὶ ἰατροῦ· ὥςπερ καὶ Πράξεις τῶν Ἀποστόλων ὑπεγράψεν μὲν ὁμοίως Πέτρος ὁ ἀπόστολος, συνεγράψατο δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς Λουκᾶς.

Τὸ δὲ κατὰ Ἰωάννην Εὐαγγέλιον ὑπηγορεύθη τε ὑπ' αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἁγίου Ἰωάννου τοῦ ἀποστόλου καὶ ἡγαπημένου, ὄντος ἐξορίστου ἐν Πάτμῳ τῇ νήσῳ, καὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐξεδόθη ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, διὰ Γαῖου τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ καὶ ξενοδόχου τῶν ἀποστόλων, περὶ οὗ καὶ Παῦλος Ῥωμαίοις γράφων φησί· Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Γαῖος ὁ ξένος μου καὶ ὅλης τῆς Ἐκκλησίας.

TESTIMONIES TO THE CANON.

<sup>1</sup> The Synod of Laodicea about A.D. 360 was only a local, probably an Arian, Synod, attended by 20 or 30 bishops from Lydia and Phrygia. The 59th Canon (ὅτι οὐ δεῖ . . . διαθήκης) is genuine; but the Catalogue which follows is now generally admitted to be the work of a later age. It will be observed that the Apocalypse is omitted. The decree was confirmed by the Quinisextine (Trullan) Council of Constantinople A.D. 692, and again by the Council of Jerusalem A.D. 1672, which, after the commotion caused by Cyril Lukar, endeavoured to settle the Canon. The Trullan Council based the acceptance of Scripture on the decrees of the Councils of Carthage and Laodicea, and on the writings of certain fathers. There was no special legate of Rome at the Council, although the ordinary representatives of the Bishop of Rome were present; and the Roman Church does not recognize all its decrees as binding. The same Council which accepted the decrees of Carthage and Laodicea, accepted also the "Apostolical Canons".

Ταῦτα δὲ διδάσκουσιν ἡμᾶς αἱ θεόπνεστοι γραφαὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς τε καὶ καινῆς διαθήκης. Εἷς γὰρ ἔστιν ὁ τῶν δύο διαθηκῶν Θεός, ὁ τὸν ἐν τῇ καινῇ φανέντα Χριστὸν ἐν τῇ παλαιᾷ προκαταγγέλλας, ὁ διὰ νόμον καὶ προφητῶν εἰς Χριστὸν παιδαγωγήσας. Πρὸ γὰρ τοῦ ἐλθεῖν τὴν πίστιν, ὑπὸ νόμον ἐφρονοῦμεθα, καὶ ὁ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς ἡμῶν γέγονεν εἰς Χριστόν. Κἂν ποτε τῶν αἵρετικῶν ἀκούσης τινὸς βλασφημοῦντος νόμον ἢ προφίτας, ἀντιφθέγγαι τὴν σωτηρίαν φωνὴν λέγων· Οὐκ ἦλθεν Ἰησοῦς καταλῆσαι τὸν νόμον, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι. Καὶ φιλομαθῶς ἐπίγνωθι παρὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, ποῖαι μὲν εἰσιν αἱ τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης βίβλοι, ποῖαι δὲ τῆς καινῆς· καὶ μοι μηδὲν τῶν ἀποκρύφων ἀναγίνωσκε. Ὁ γὰρ τὰ παρὰ πᾶσιν ὁμολογούμενα μὴ εἰδὼς, τί περὶ τὰ ἀμφιβαλλόμενα τυλαπωρεῖς μάτην; Ἀναγίνωσκε τὰς θείας γραφάς, τὰς εἰκοσι δύο βίβλους τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης τὰς ὑπὸ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο ἐρμηνευτῶν ἐρμηνευθείσας. . . . . Τῆς δὲ καινῆς διαθήκης, τὰ τέσσαρα Εὐαγγέλια· τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ψευδεπίγραφα καὶ βλαβερά τεγγάει. Ἐγραψαν καὶ Μανιχαῖοι κατὰ Θωμᾶν Εὐαγγέλιον, ὅπερ, ὥσπερ εὐωδία τῆς εὐαγγελικῆς προσωπείας, διαφθείρει τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν ἀπλουστέρων. Λέχου δὲ καὶ τὰς Πράξεις τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων· πρὸς τοῦτοις δὲ καὶ τὰς ἐπτὰ Ἰακώβου καὶ Πέτρου Ἰωάννου καὶ Ἰούδα Καθολικὰς Ἐπιστολάς· ἐπισφράγισμα δὲ τῶν πάντων καὶ μαθητῶν τὸ τελενταῖον, τὰς Παύλου δεκατέσσαρας ἐπιστολάς. Τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ πάντα ἔξω κείσθω ἐν δευτέρῳ. Καὶ ὅσα μὲν ἐν ἐκκλησίαις μὴ ἀναγινώσκεται, ταῦτα μηδὲ κατὰ σκεπτικὸν ἀναγίνωσκε, καθὼς ἤκουσας. Καὶ περὶ μὲν τούτων, ταῦτα.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cyril died A.D. 386. It will be observed that he includes without hesitation in his N. T. all the books save the Apocalypse. Those which Eusebius a few years before had described as Antilegomena seem in the interval to have been accepted by all. Cyril founds his statements on the general agreement to which the Church had come; and appeals from local or individual peculiarities to that general consent. There is in the closing words a reference to some books that may be read in some Churches but are only fitted for the "second rank;" and others not read in Churches at all are to be avoided by the private reader.

<sup>2</sup> Between A.D. 390 and A.D. 419 six Councils were held in Africa, four of them in Carthage (Bruns 111-151). This—the third of those—was held under the presidency of Aurelius, Bp. of Carthage. Augustine (as Bishop of Hippo) was present. So far as we know, it was the first Council of the Christian Church which enumerated the Books of N. T. Scripture; for although the Laodicean Decree (given above) is earlier, the genuine portion does not contain the Catalogue. It was not a general Council; it was only a local Council, attended by 44 Bishops, all of whom subscribed the decree. It is not therefore an authoritative utterance of the general Church. Its decree was not confirmed by any larger Council till A.D. 692, when the Trullan Council (see note on Laodicean Decree) accepted it for the Eastern Church. In the Western Church more than 1000 years passed before the unfinished task of defining the Canon was resumed; and even then (A.D. 1435) it was the solitary voice of a Pope (Eugenius) which proclaimed its completion. Nearly 1200 years passed before a general Council (Trent) made a decree on the subject, and its conclusions were much less accurate than those of the little gathering in Carthage. The acceptance of a Canon of the N. T. does not rest on the authority of the corporate Church. And it is not as to an Ecclesiastical authority that we look back to the Council of Carthage; but we find in its decree a statement of a well-ascertained fact—the general agreement of the Church as to the nature and number of the Books of Canonical Scripture. The decree bears on the face of it that the question was as to what should be read in Churches; and that the answer was: Canonical Scripture alone, save that on Days of the Saints the histories of their Martyrdoms might be read in addition to the Canon. To prevent ambiguity, the names of the Books denoted "Canonical Scripture" are added.

<sup>3</sup> This reference to Boniface is supposed by some to have been originally a marginal note which in course of time found its way into the text. Boniface was not Bishop of Rome at the time of the Council. It is supposed that when the African Canons were collected into one Code, this passage was a reference to him and other representatives of foreign Churches, not intended to be taken as part of the original decree. There are various readings, Consacerdoti, Coepiscopo, &c., in his name, intimating that liberties were taken with the designation of Boniface.

5. CANON OF JEROME.

Tangam et Novum breviter Testamentum. Matthaeus, Marcus, Lucas et Joannes, quadriga Domini et verum Cherubim, quod interpretatur scientiae multitudo, per totum corpus oculati sunt, scintillae emicant, discurrunt fulgura, pedes habent rectos et in sublime tendentes, terga pennata et ubique volitantia. Tenent mutuo, et quasi rota in rota volvuntur, et pergunt quocumque eos flatus Sancti Spiritus perduxerit.

But—assuming that the decree was in answer to a question—it may have been some neighbouring local bishop who put the question, and whose name was Boniface.

Paulus Apostolus ad septem ecclesias scribit (octava enim ad Hebraeos a plerisque extra numerum ponitur), Timotheum instruit ac Titum, Philemonem pro fugitivo famulo deprecatur. Super quo tacere melius puto, quam pauca scribere. Actus Apostolorum nudam quidem sonare videntur historiam, et nascentis ecclesiae infantiam texere: sed si noverimus scriptorem eorum Lucam esse medicum, cujus laus est in evangelio, animadvertemus pariter omnia verba illius, animae languentis esse medicinam. Jacobus, Petrus, Joannes, Judas apostoli septem epistolas ediderunt tam mysticas quam succinctas et breves pariter et longas: breves in verbis, longas in sententiis, ut rarus sit qui non in earum lectione caecutiat. Apocalypsis Joannis tot habet sacramenta, quot verba. Parum dixi pro merito voluminis. Laus omnis inferior est: in verbis singulis multiplices latent intelligentiae.

6. AUGUSTINE.<sup>1</sup>

Erit igitur divinarum scripturarum solertissimus indagator, qui primo totas legerit notasque habuerit, et si nondum intellectu jam tamen lectione, duntaxat eas quae appellantur Canonicae. Nam caeteras securius leget fide veritatis instructus, ne praecupent imbecillum animum, et periculosis mendaciis atque phantasmatis eludentes praejudicent aliquid contra sanam intelligentiam. In Canonicis autem Scripturis, ecclesiarum catholicarum quamplurimum auctoritatem sequatur; inter quas sane illae sint, quae apostolicas sedes habere et epistolas accipere meruerunt. Tenebit igitur hunc modum in Scripturis Canonicis, ut eas quae ab omnibus accipiuntur ecclesiis Catholicis praeponat eis quas quaedam non accipiunt: in eis vero quae non accipiuntur ab omnibus, praeponat eas quas plures gravioresque accipiunt eis quas pauciores minorisque auctoritatis ecclesiae tenent. Si autem alias invenerit a pluribus, alias a gravioribus haberi, quanquam hoc facile invenire non possit, aequalis tamen auctoritatis eas

<sup>1</sup> Aug., De Doctrina Christiana, II. 12. 13. Augustine was Bishop of Hippo, born A.D. 354, died A.D. 430. His opinion on Canonicity is not so valuable as his contemporary Jerome's. But in his voluminous writings he shows not only his own opinion but the views current in his time. He accepted the received Canon of the New Testament. He had doubts as to the authorship of Hebrews, but none as to its Canonicity.

7. CHRYSOSTOM.

Chrysostom (died A.D. 407), who had been a Presbyter in Antioch before he was made Patriarch of Constantinople, never cites the Apocalypse or the four Catholic Epistles which are excluded from the Syriac Canon. In a Synopsis ascribed to him the Apocalypse is wanting, and the Catholic Epistles are expressly mentioned as three in number.

8. COD. ALEX.

Codex Alexandrinus (Cod. A). Date perhaps end of fourth century, probably beginning of fifth. It contains all the N. T. in the following list: Matt., Mark, Luke, John, Acts, Cath. Epp. (James, Peter (2), John (3), Jude), Epp. of Paul (Rom., Cor. (2), Gal., Eph., Phil., Coloss., Thess. (2), Hebrews, Timothy (2), Titus, Philemon), Apocalypse of John, Clement's Epp. (2), after which come the words ἡμοῦ βιβλία, as though to intimate that the Canon is closed, but another line adds Psalms of Solomon (18).

9. GELASIUS, A.D. 492.<sup>1</sup>

Apocalypsis lib. i. Apostolicarum epistolarum num. vii. Petri apostoli num. ii. Jacobi apostoli num. i. Joannis apostoli num. iii. Judae.

The Recension in the name of a Council under Damasus gives the names of the Pauline Epistles, and ascribes one Epistle to John the Apostle, two to John the Presbyter, and the Apocalypse to John the Apostle.

The Recension in the name of Hormisdas gives the three Johannine Epistles without distinction.

There is also a famous chapter containing the names of many books which the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church does not at all admit, because they are heretical or schismatical.<sup>2</sup> Among them are:

Acts: Itinerarium Petri Apostoli, quod appellatur Sancti Clementis, Actus Andreae, Thomae libr. x, Petri, Philippi.

Gospels: Evv. nomine Petri Apostoli, Matthiae, Jacobi Minoris, Barnabae, Thomae (quibus Manichaei utuntur) Bartholomaei, Andreae, Thaddaei, "Evv. quae falsavit Lucianus, apocrypha; Evv. quae falsavit Isidrus, apocrypha."

Miscellaneous: De infantia Salvatoris et de Maria obstetrice ejus: liber qui appellatur Pastoris, apocr.; libri omnes, <sup>1</sup> It is probable that concerning an official statement on the part of the Roman Church regarding the Books to be read and to be avoided respectively. Its origin and date are uncertain, and it seems to at least many variations in different MSS. It may date (or perhaps some germ of it dates,) from Damasus (366-384); some of it is as old as Gelasius, (493-496); but its principal forms claim the name of Hormisdas (514-523), although probably altered in later times. It appears to rest on the earlier testimonies of Athanasius and Jerome. The list of Biblical Books is not found in all the MSS, but seems to have been added by (or ascribed at a later date to) Hormisdas, and sent to Spain, where it was much needed. It shows that those regarding the Books required to be corrected in many places at the beginning of our sixth Century. In the O. T. it includes the Apocrypha.

10. APOSTOLICAL CONSTITUTIONS (διατάξεις).<sup>1</sup>

II. 57. Μέσος δ' ὁ ἀγνωστός ἐκ' ὑψηλῶ τιμῆς ἐστὶς ἀγνωστοίῳ τὰ Μυστήρια. Καὶ . . . μετὰ ταῦτα αἱ Παύλει αἱ ἡμετέροι ἀγνωστολέσθωσαν καὶ Ἐπιστολαὶ Παύλου τοῦ συνοδοῦ ἡμῶν, ὃς ἐπέστειλε ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις καὶ ὑψίστην τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος. Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα

<sup>1</sup> The Apostolical Constitutions should perhaps scarcely be quoted, as being an obvious forgery. Bunsen refers the greater part of them to the third century, but they more probably belong, in whole or in part, to the following century. They claim to be sent by Clement together with Barnabas, Timothy, and Mark. They begin in name of the Apostles and Elders. Elsewhere they claim to be written by the "twelve Apostles who are not now together." If this claim to be a formal ordinance of the Apostles were only admitted, the question of the Canon would be settled! But the first barely probable allusions to the work are in the writings of Eusebius and of Athanasius, who speak of a book called the doctrine (or doctrines) of the Apostles. Athanasius speaks of it (δεδοχθῆ) as a book useful for instructing catechumens. Eusebius puts it (δεδοχθῆ) among the spurious. Epiphanius speaks of a sect—the Audians—who found on the δεδοχθῆ τῶν ἀποστόλων, a book counted doubtful (he says) by most people, but still not unworthy of regard, inasmuch as it contains the whole order of Church Government. Even, however, if we regarded the book which Epiphanius had in view as being that to which Athanasius and Eusebius refer we have not found any proof of its existence earlier than the fourth century, or the end of the third. But, moreover, the extracts which Epiphanius gives do not agree with the contents of the book which has come down to us. Furthermore, Epiphanius regards it as doubtful and does not mention it in his own list of Canonical Books. The Book, as we have it, witnesses against itself. We observe also that it contradicts the New Testament in prescribing fast-days and Sabbaths, and that it is inconsistent with the New Testament in setting all the twelve Apostles anterior to the time when John wrote. It nevertheless contains, amid many cherubim directions of later date, not a few learned, learned passages, and contains most welcome for Scripture. It urges, neither of the Church as the complete representation of the Law, the Kings, and the Prophets (II. 11), equates Exposition of the Gospel along with the Prophets and the Law (III. 14); and is an excellent passage, gives instructions as to public worship, it declares that "our Lord" and Paul, Stephen, and the Synops of Mark and John, and of "Paul's fellow-laborers" Mark and Luke, be read, and the Name of David be sung (II. 17). —RAMESSE AMMONS, Antiquities.

διάκονος ἢ πρεσβύτερος ἀναγινωσκέτω τὰ εὐαγγέλια, ἃ ἐγὼ Ματθαῖος καὶ Ἰωάννης παρεδώκαμεν ὑμῖν, καὶ ἃ οἱ συνεργοὶ Παύλου παρεληφότες κατέλειψαν ὑμῖν, Λουκᾶς καὶ Μάρκος.

At a later stage the same work says:—

VI. 16. Ταῦτα πάντα ἐπεστείλαμεν ὑμῖν, ἵνα εἰδέναι ἔχοιτε τὴν ἡμετέραν (τῶν ἀποστόλων) γνώμην, οἷα τις ἐστί· καὶ τὰ ἐπ' ὀνόματι ἡμῶν παρὰ τῶν ἀσεβῶν κρατυθεντα βιβλία μὴ παραδέχεσθαι· οὐ γὰρ τοῖς ὀνόμασι χρὴ ὑμᾶς προσέχειν τῶν ἀποστόλων, ἀλλὰ τῇ φύσει τῶν πραγμάτων καὶ τῇ γνώμῃ τῇ ἀδιαστρόφῳ. Οἶδαμεν γάρ, ὅτι οἱ περὶ Σίμωνα καὶ Κλέοβιον, ἰώδη συντάξαντες βιβλία ἐπ' ὀνόμασι Χριστοῦ καὶ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, περιφέρουσιν εἰς ἀπάτην ὑμῶν τῶν περιληγόντων Χριστὸν καὶ ἡμᾶς τοὺς αὐτοῦ δούλους. Καὶ ἐν τοῖς παλαιοῖς δέ τινες συνέγραψαν βιβλία ἀπόκρυφα Μωσέως, καὶ Ἐνὼχ, καὶ Ἀδὰμ, Ἡσαΐου τε καὶ Δαβὶδ καὶ Ἡλίας καὶ τῶν τριῶν Πατριαρχῶν, φθοροποιὰ καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐχθρά. <sup>1</sup> From Bunsen's Analecta Antenicæna (1854). This Canon probably dates from the fourth century. To this date we are led by the omission of the Apocalypse, which was not acceptable to the Eastern Christians at that time. The curious claim that the Constitutions were "inscribed to you the Bishops by me Clement, in eight books, which ought not to be divulged before all," connects the Canons with the Constitutions, regarding which see last Note. The title as given above, "Canones Ecclesiastici qui dicuntur Apostolorum," is that given to the Collection by Dionysius the Less, a priest who translated them from the Greek, A.D. 500. It indicates the translator's doubts of their genuineness; and he even

12. CODEx CLAROMONTANUS.

Codex Claromontanus <sup>1</sup> (Cod. D of Pauline Epp.) contains between the Epistles Philemon and Hebrews a list entitled Verus Scribaturarum Sanctarum, in which are all the books of the O. T. (with Apocrypha in peculiar order). Its New Testament list is Evangelia Mat., Joh., Marc., Luc.; Epist. Pauli, ad Romanos, ad Chorintios 1. 2, ad Galatas, ad Efesios, ad Timotheum 1. 2, ad Colosenses, ad Filimonem, ad Petrum 1. 2, Jacobi, Johanni Epist. 1. 2. 3, Judae Epist., Barnabae Epist., Johannis Revelatio, Actus Apostolorum, Pastoris, Actus Pauli, Revelatio Petri.<sup>2</sup> adds, "quibus plurimi consensum non praeuere facilem." In his collection they were 50 in number; but about 50 years later they were published in Greek, numbering 85, by John Scholasticus, afterwards Patriarch of Constantinople. The Trullan Council in 692 decreed them to be genuine. See Hefele, Hist. of Councils (Eng. trans.), p. 449. The Roman Church accepts 50, the Greek Church 85.

jectured. It would probably be useless to seek to account for omissions in it which are more likely to have arisen from accident or ignorance than from intention or knowledge. Tisch. (Proleg. p. XVI) says that the list was evidently made before there was much discussion of the Canon; that its way of dealing with Hebrews shows that it was made before Augustine's day; and that it was most probably of African origin. But the arguments scarcely apply, for Hebrews is not the only omitted Epistle; and moreover the presence of non-canonical books in Cod. A and in S cannot be reconciled with (say) the Decree of the Council of Laodicea. The presence or absence of books in a special list or MS is not always to be explained by general considerations.

Sacrosancta oecumenica et generalis Tridentina Synodus, in Spiritu Sancto legitime congregata praesidentibus in ea eisdem tribus Apostolicae Sedis legatis hoc sibi perpetuo ante omnia proponens, ut sublatis erroribus puritas ipsa evangelii in ecclesia conservetur, quod promissum ante per Prophetas in Scripturis

His list of N. T. Books agrees with our Canon—save that the Apocalypse is not found in that division, but in the second class, or Antilegomena. His list may be an older one revived. His division reminds us of Eusebius's, but instead of ἐμολογούμεναι γραφαί, he speaks of acceptance by the Church, and canonisation. See Credner Gesch. des N. T. Kanon, p. 243; Westcott Canon, p. 522.

<sup>3</sup> There is controversy as to the precise scope of this decree. It is pleaded on the one hand that it only singles out the Vulgate from other Latin editions: and decrees that a correct edition of it shall be published forthwith. It is represented on the other hand that the attempts of successive Popes [Sixtus V. 1590, Clement VIII. 1592] to publish a standard edition show the object of the decree to have been the fixing of the text of Scripture as against all comers. The decree is certainly not so clear as Protestants sometimes represent it to be. But there can be little freedom when any Latin text of the Vulgate is held as "authentic" in all public controversies. Compare the prohibition of reading Scripture in the Vulgar tongue except when special permission has been obtained (Pius IV. 1564). The Clementine Vulgate, which was so soon needed to supersede the edition of the Pope two years before, is still the standard in the Romish Church.

of the doctrine delivered by Christ and the Apostles, is an authoritative<sup>2</sup> source of teaching for all successive generations of Christians. This tradition is partly to be found in the consensus of the great ecclesiastical bodies standing in historical continuity with the primitive Church, partly to be gathered by scientific method from the written documents of all centuries.

20. PHILARET'S LONGER CATECHISM<sup>1</sup> OF THE ORTHODOX, CATHOLIC, EASTERN CHURCH, MOSCOW, 1839.

(Question) 16. How is divine revelation spread among men and preserved in the true Church?

By two channels—holy tradition and holy Scripture.

17. What is meant by the name holy tradition?

By the name holy tradition is meant the doctrine of the faith, the law of God, the sacraments, and the ritual as handed down by the true believers and worshippers of God by word and example from one to another, and from generation to generation.

18. Is there any sure repository of holy tradition?

All true believers united by the doctrine of the faith, collectively and successively, by the will of God, compose the Church; and she is the sure repository of holy tradition, or as St. Paul expresses it, "The Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth"—1 Tim. iii. 15.

St. Irenaeus writes thus: "We ought not to seek among others the truth, which we may have for asking from the Church: for in her, as in a rich treasure house, the Apostles have laid up in its fulness all that pertains to the truth, so that whosoever seeketh may receive from her the food of life. She is the door of life." (Adv. Haeres. lib. III. c. 4.)

19. What is that which you call holy Scripture?

Certain books written by the Spirit of God through men sanctified by God, called Prophets and Apostles. These books are commonly termed the Bible.

20. What does the word Bible mean?

It is Greek, and means the books. The name signifies that the sacred books deserve attention before all others.

21. Which is the more ancient, holy tradition or holy Scripture?

The most ancient and original instrument for spreading divine revelation is holy tradition. . . . The necessity of tradition is further evident from this, that books can be available only to a small part of mankind, but tradition to all.

22.—Why, then, was holy Scripture given?

To this end, that divine revelation might be preserved more exactly and unchangeably. In holy Scripture we read the words of the Prophets and Apostles precisely as if we were living with them and listening to them, although the latest of the sacred books were written a thousand and some hundred years before our time.

23. Must we follow holy tradition, even when we possess holy Scripture?

We must follow that tradition which agrees with the divine revelation and with holy Scripture, as is taught us by holy Scripture itself. The Apostle Paul writes: "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle"—2 Thess. ii. 15.

31. How many are the books of the Old Testament?

St. Cyril of Jerusalem, St. Athanasius the Great, and St. John Damascene reckon them at twenty-two, agreeing therein with the Jews, who so reckon them in the original Hebrew tongue. (Athanas. Ep. XXXIX de Test., J. Damasc. Theol. lib. IV. c. 17.)

34. Why is there no notice taken in this enumeration [the enumeration of St. Cyril and St. Athanasius] of the books of the Old Testament, of the book of the Wisdom of the Son of Sirach, and of certain others?

Because they do not exist in the Hebrew.

35. How are we to regard these last named books?

Athanasius the Great says that they have been appointed of the Fathers to be read by proselytes who are preparing for admission into the Church.

44. How many are the books of the New Testament?

Twenty-seven.

<sup>1</sup> "Prophets" here must mean the Prophetic authors of Books in the O. T. "Gospel" probably means the contents of the Gospel; and the "Apostles" we take to mean the apostolic founders of the Christian Church. These last renderings are indefinite; but there are objections to any more definite interpretation of the phrases used. At a later time "the Gospel" and "the Apostle" were familiar terms, indicating the two great subdivisions of the New Testament; but we want authority for ascribing that meaning to so early a writer as Ignatius. He probably meant by "Gospel" to denote the Christian truth contained in Christ's life, whether conveyed in writing or orally; and by "Apostles" to indicate a reference to their writings, and at the same time to their traditional arrangements in and for the Church. Elsewhere he likens the Presbytery to the synod or Sanhedrim of Apostles (Magnesians c. 6; Trallians c. 2 and c. 3): and he seems here to speak of the Apostles as a perpetual Presbytery whose opinion on all difficulties was easily obtained and was to be implicitly followed. The following Extracts from the Smyrnaean Epistle seem to be consistent with this rendering; and to make the other from the Philadelphian more easily intelligible. Lardner (citing on the same side Grabe, Mill and Le Clerc) "understands by the 'Gospel' the book or volume of the Gospels; by 'the Apostles' the book or volume of their Epistles; as by 'the Prophets' the volume or whole canon of the New Testament." See Lardner vol. I. p. 322.

<sup>2</sup> The readings in this difficult passage vary; ἀρχαῖα, ἄδεια, οὐ πρόκειται, being found. By using ἀρχεῖα (archives) a consistent meaning is given. It appears that Ignatius, in disputing with certain adversaries—heretics—found that they insisted on appealing to the Archives—to the original Gospel records; and that when he said "It is written," they retorted that this did not close the controversy (πρόκειται, i.e., that is the point in dispute). Whereupon he recapitulates the main facts on record which those heretics appear to have denied. It is clear, therefore, that at this period disputants on both sides appealed to written standards. It may be doubtful whether both appealed to the same standards; but it seems most probable that they did, and that they differed as to the interpretations. The <sup>1</sup> The force of this passage lies in the inference that a new collection of books was known from which the Old Testament (“The old Books”) was distinguished. Eusebius begins the chapter by enumerating the works of Melito upon various subjects of Christian philosophy and theology, among which he names a work “on the Apocalypse of John.” He was bishop of Sardis in the time of Marcus Aurelius. The author of Supernatural Religion, II. 17 (and Sanday agrees so far with him) points to 2 Cor. iii. 6. 14 ἐπὶ τῇ ἀναγνώσει τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης as proof that the “Old Covenant” is a phrase referring to “the doctrinal view,” not to the Books. But this does not dispose of the argument founded on τὰ παλαιὰ βιβλία as connected with ἡ παλαιὰ διαθήκη. Does the author of Sup. Rel. mean that there were no Books in the time of Melito recognized as containing the New Covenant? He says the date of Melito falls after A.D. 176; and if so, such a contention is impossible. There is not much known of his date except that his Apology was addressed to the Emperor in A.D. 170. Polycrates (in Eus. H. E. V. 24), in his letter to Victor, speaks of him as buried in Sardis, and terms him “Μελίτωνα τὸν εὐνοῦχον, τὸν ἐν Ἁγίῳ πνεύματι πάντα πολιτευσάμενον,” and there has been much controversy as to whether he was literally or metaphorically a eunuch. On Melito and his writings see Donaldson, Hist. of Christian Literature and Doctrine, III. 221.

<sup>1</sup> Dionysius was Bishop of Corinth about A.D. 170. The extract is from his letter to the Romans. The question here is whether by τῶν κυριακῶν γραφῶν he means the N. T. Scripture (see Lardner), the Gospels (see Donaldson), or (as held in Sup. Rel. II. 166) “the Scriptures of the Old Testament.” For this last no authority is adduced; and it is idle to refer to Justin’s accumulation of O. T. Scriptures predicting Christ. The author goes on (Sup. Rel. II. p. 167) to show that Serapion found the Gospel of Peter in the third century in Rhosse, and that Theodoret found (423) Tatian’s Diatessaron “in esteem in our Churches;” but this argument tells against himself. Such books were found here and there over the Church; but the question is whether there was all the while a consent of the Church as a whole in favour of our N. T. Books. No one can deny that there was such consent long before the fifth century. To prove that other than Canonical Books existed in the time of Dionysius is superfluous; and if the writer’s argument is valid in establishing a parallel between the case at that date and the case in the fifth century, it would prove that the Church as a whole had at both dates a Canon, although in some localities special favour was shown to uncanonical books. Eusebius gives another quotation from Dionysius in the same chapter, stating that the Epistle of Clement was daily read on the Lord’s Day in γράφει, ἔγραψα. Καὶ ταύτας οἱ τοῦ διαβόλου ἀπόστολοι ζιζανίων γερέμικαν, ἃ μὲν ἐξαροῦντες, ἃ δὲ προστιθέντες. Οἷς τὸ οὐαί κεῖται. Οὐ θαυμαστὸν ἄρα, εἰ καὶ τῶν κεριαζῶν ἡρδιοτογῆσαι τινες ἐπιβέβληνται γραφῶν, ὁπότε καὶ ταῖς οὐ τοιαύτας ἐπιβεβλήμασι."

Corinth; and if so, the supremacy of Paul's doctrine was recognized. [See Introduction: Clement.] More important is it to compare the words of Dionysius with those of his contemporaries Melito and Irenaeus, quoted in our text regarding "Scripture of the Lord." Eusebius devotes a chapter (II. E. IV. 23) to Dionysius, and we learn from it that he wrote many "Catholic Epistles" to other Churches than his own. His letter to the Romans was written while Soter was Bishop.

<sup>1</sup> These words point to a collection of "evangelical" and "apostolical" writings. The extracts show that Irenaeus called the New Testament "Scriptures," like the Old. See also "Dominicis Scripturis enutrir" (V. 20. 2). We have also ἑξῆς γραφαί (apparently referring to both Testaments), (II. 27. 1.) He quotes also from the Presbyters (IV. 32. 1) special testimony to the unity of the two Testaments.

B. III. 4. 1. 2. Quid autem si neque apostoli quidem scripturas reliquissent nobis, nonne oportebat ordinem sequi traditionis, quam tradiderunt iis, quibus committebant ecclesias? <sup>1</sup> Tertullian: born about A.D. 160, died A.D. 220-240. He was a native of Carthage, a married man, and (according to Jerome) a Presbyter. It is not certain where he exercised his functions as Presbyter. In his later days he became a Montanist, driven (says Jerome) from the Church by the harsh usage of the Roman clergy. Some of his works were written after he left the Church. These facts are almost all we know of his outer life. His character is written in his books, impetuous, eloquent, sarcastic, an advocate rather than a judge. His aim was to defend Christianity against the unworthy suspicions both of the rulers and the ruled. So in his Apology he maintained against the heathen that Christians had purer lives than they; in his 'Adv. Judaeos' he proved the superiority of the Gospel to the law; in his 'De praescriptione haeticorum' he showed how Catholic Christians should deal with heretics; in his treatise 'Adv. Marcionem' he exposed the assumptions of the Gnostics. It is to be borne in mind that with all his impetuosity he wrote systematically, and quoted very largely from Scripture. In his treatises De Resurrectione, De Pudicitia, and Adv. Marcionem he cites in regular sequence the Scripture passages bearing on the subject in hand. When therefore he does not quote a passage or a book which we know to bear on his subject, we may infer that he did not know it or did not use it. He uses all the N. T. but James, 2 Peter, 2 & 3 John. Hebrews was not, however, part of the Canon of the African Church, as is obvious from his mode of citation (see below: 'Hebrews'). He quotes Jude as establishing the place of Enoch. See Rünsch: Das Neue Testament Tertullians, for a compilation of his quotations.

adeo nec sunt, nec probare possunt quod non sunt, nec recipiuntur in pacem et communicationem ab Ecclesiis quoquo modo apostolicis; scilicet ob diversitatem sacramenti nullo modo apostolicae.

Ibid. c. 33. Adhibeo super haec ipsarum doctrinarum recognitionem, quae tunc sub apostolis fuerunt, ab iisdem apostolis et demonstratae et dejeratae. Nam et sic facilius traducuntur: dum aut jam tunc fuisse deprehenduntur, aut ex illis quae jam tunc fuerunt, seminia sumpsisse. Paulus in prima ad Corinthios (xv. 12) notat negatores et dubitatores resurrectionis. Haec opinio propria Sadducaeorum; partem ejus usurpat Marcion, et Apelles, et Valentinus, et si qui alii resurrectionem carnis infringunt. Et ad Galatas (v. 2) scribens, invehitur in observatores et defensores circumcisionis et legis: Hebionis haeresis sic est. Timotheum instruens (1 Tim. iv. 3), nuptiarum quoque interdictores suggillat: ita instituunt Marcion, et Apelles ejus secutor. Aequae tangit eos, qui dicerent factam jam resurrectionem (2 Tim. ii. 3): id de se Valentiniani adseverant. Sed et cum genealogias indeterminatas nominat (1 Tim. i. 4), Valentinus agnoscitur: apud quem Aeon ille nescio qui novi, et non unius nominis, generat e sua Charite Sensum et Veritatem: et hi aequae procreant ex se Sermonem et Vitam, dehinc et isti generant Hominem et Ecclesiam: de qua prima ogdoade aeonum. Exinde decem alii, et duodecim reliqui aeones miris nominibus oriuntur, in meram fabulam triginta aeonum. Idem apostolus, cum improbat elementis servientes, aliquid Hermogenis ostendit, qui materiam non natam introducens, Deo non nato eam comparat, et ita matrem elementorum deam faciens, potest ei servire quam Deo comparat. Joannes vero, in Apocalypsi (ii. 20), idolothyta edentes et stupra committentes jubetur castigare: sunt et nunc alii Nicolaitae, Gaiana haeresis dicitur. At in epistola eos maxime antichristos vocat, qui Christum negarent in carnem venisse, et qui non putarent Jesum esse Filium Dei: illud Marcion, hoc Hebion vindicavit. Simonianae autem magiae disciplina, angelis serviens, utique et ipsa inter idololatrias deputabatur, et a Petro apostolo in ipso Simone damnabatur.

Ibid. c. 36. Age jam, qui voles curiositatem melius exercere in negotio salutis tuae, percurrere Ecclesias apostolicas, apud quas ipsae adhuc cathedrae apostolorum suis locis praesident,<sup>2</sup> apud quas ipsae authenticae literae<sup>3</sup> eorum recitantur, sonantes vocem et repraesentantes faciem uniuscujusque. Proxima est tibi Achaia, habes Corinthum. Si non longe es a Macedonia, habes Philippos, habes Thessalonicenses. Si potes in Asiam tendere, habes Ephesum. Si autem Italiae adjaces, habes Romam, unde nobis quoque auctoritas praesto est. Ista quam felix Ecclesia! cui totam doctrinam apostoli cum sanguine suo profuderunt, ubi Petrus passioni Dominicae adaequatur; ubi Paulus Joannis exitu coronatur; ubi apostolus Joannes, posteaquam, in oleum igneum demersus, nihil passus est, in insulam relegatur; videamus quid didicerit, quid docuerit, cum Africanis quoque Ecclesiis contesserarit. Unum Deum Dominum novit, Creatorem universitatis, et Christum Jesum ex Virgine Maria, Filium Dei Creatoris, et carnis resurrectionem: legem et prophetas cum evangelicis et apostolicis literis miscet, et inde potat fidem.

Ibid. c. 37. Si haec ita se habent, ut veritas nobis adjudicetur, quicumque in ea regula incedimus quam Ecclesia ab apostolis, apostoli a Christo, Christus a Deo tradidit, constat ratio propositi nostri, definientis non esse admittendos haereticos ad ineundam de Scripturis provocationem, quos sine Scripturis probamus ad Scripturas non pertinere. Si enim haeretici sunt, Christiani esse non possunt, non a Christo habendo quod de sua electione sectati haeticorum nomine admittunt. Ita non Christiani, nullum jus capiunt Christianarum literarum. Ad quos merito dicendum est: qui estis? quando, et unde venistis? quid in meo agitis, non mei? quo denique, Marcion, jure silvam meam caedis? qua licentia, Valentine, fontes meos transvertis? qua potestate, Apelles, limites meos commoves? Quid hic caeteri ad voluntatem vestram seminatis et pascitis? Mea est possessio; olim possideo: habeo origines firmas, ab ipsis auctoribus quorum fuit res. Ego sum haeres apostolorum. Sicut caverunt testamento suo, sicut fidei commiserunt, sicut adjuraverunt, ita teneo. Vos certe exhaeredaverunt semper et abdicaverunt, ut extraneos, ut inimicos. Unde autem extranei et inimici apostolis haeretici, nisi ex diversitate doctrinae, quam unusquisque de suo arbitrio, adversus apostolos aut protulit, aut recepit?

Ibid. c. 38. Illic igitur et Scripturarum et expositionum adulteratio deputanda est, ubi diversitas doctrinae invenitur. Quibus fuit propositum aliter docendi, eos necessitas coëgit aliter disponendi instrumenta doctrinae.) Alias enim non potuissent aliter docere, nisi aliter haberent per quae docerent. Sicut illis non potuisset succedere corruptela doctrinae sine corruptela instrumentorum ejus; ita et nobis integritas doctrinae non competitisset sine integritate eorum, per quae doctrina tractatur. Et enim quid contrarium nobis in nostris? quid de proprio intulimus, ut aliquid contrarium ei quod esset in Scripturis deprehensum, detractio, vel adjectione, vel transmutatione remediaremus? Quod sumus, hoc sunt Scripturae ab initio suo; ex illis sumus, antequam aliter fuit, antequam a vobis interpolarentur. Cum autem omnis interpolatio posterior credenda sit, veniens utique ex causa aemulationis, quae neque prior, neque domestica unquam est ejus quod aemulatur, tam incredibile est sapienti cuique, ut nos adulterum stilum intulisse videamur Scripturis, qui sumus a principio et primi, quam illos non intulisse qui sunt et posterius et adversi. Alius manu Scripturas, alius sensus expositione intervertit. Neque enim, si Valentinus integro instrumento uti videtur, non callidiore ingenio, quam Marcion, manus intulit veritati. Marcion enim exserte et palam machaera, non stilo usus est; quoniam ad materiam suam caedem Scripturarum confecit. Valentinus autem pepercit, quoniam non ad materiam Scripturas, sed materiam ad Scripturas excogitavit: et tamen plus abstulit, et plus adjecit, auferens proprietates singulorum quoque verborum, et adjiciens dispositiones non comparentium rerum.

Adv. Marcionem, IV. 1. Omnem sententiam et omnem paraturam impii atque sacrilegi Marcionis ad ipsum jam Evangelium ejus provocamus, quod interpolando suum fecit. Et ut fidem instrueret, dotem quamdam commentatus est illi, opus ex

Apologeticum, c. 31. Adolati nunc sumus imperatori et mentiti vota, quae diximus, ad evadendam scilicet vim. Plane proficit ista fallacia. Admittis nos enim probare quodcunque defendimus. Scitote ex illis, praeceptum esse nobis ad redundantiam benignitatis, etiam pro inimicis Deum orare, et persecutoribus nostris bona precari. Qui magis inimici et persecutores Christianorum, quam de quorum majestate convenimur in crimen? Sed etiam nominatim et manifeste Orate, inquit, pro regibus, et pro principibus et potestatibus, ut omnia tranquilla sint vobis (1 Tim. ii. 2). Cum enim concutitur imperium, concussis etiam ceteris membris ejus, utique et nos, licet extranei a turbis aestimemur, in aliquo loco casus invenimur.

De Monogamia, c. 11. Sciamus plane non sic esse in Graeco authentico quomodo in usum exiit per duarum syllabarum aut callidam aut simplicem eversionem. <sup>4</sup>Si autem dormierit vir ejus quasi de futuro sonet ac per hoc videatur ad eam pertinere quae jam in fide virum amiserit.

<sup>1</sup> As this passage stands, Origen apparently implies that Paul was the author of Hebrews, and he adds James and Jude to the list given as his by Eus. II. E. VI. 25 (see before, page 9). If omnes be in the nom. (omnes N. T. puteos fodiunt), there may be no reference to Hebrews.

Isaac, Matthaeus, Marcus, Lucas et Joannes. Pueri ejus sunt Petrus, Jacobus et Judas: puer ejus est et apostolus Paulus, qui omnes Novi Testamenti puteos fodiunt. Sed et pro his altercantur illi qui terrena sapiunt, nec nova condi patiuntur, nec vetera purgari. Evangelicis puteis contradicunt, apostolicis adversantur. Et quoniam in omnibus contradicunt, in omnibus litigant, dicitur ad eos: Quoniam indignos vos fecistis gratia Dei, ex hoc jam ad gentes ibimus (Acts xiii. 46).

Hom. on Book of Joshua, VII. 2. p. 412. <sup>2</sup>Veniens vero Dominus noster Jesus Christus, cujus ille prior filius Nave designabat adventum, mittit sacerdotes apostolos suos portantes tubas ductiles, praedicationis magnificam coelestemque doctrinam. Sacerdotali tuba primus in Evangelio suo Matthaeus increpuit, Marcus quoque, Lucas et Joannes, suis singulis tubis sacerdotalibus cecinerunt. Petrus etiam duabus epistolarum suarum personat tubis. Jacobus quoque et Judas. Addit nihilominus adhuc et Joannes tuba canere per epistolas suas et Apocalypsim et Lucas Apostolorum gesta describens. Novissime autem ille veniens, qui dixit: puto autem nos Deus novissimos apostolos ostendit (1 Cor. iv. 9) et in quatuordecim epistolarum suarum fulminans tubis, muros Jericho et omnes idololatriae machinas et philosophorum dogmata usque ad fundamenta dejecit.

8. LACTANTIUS.

Verum scriptura omnis in duo Testamenta divisa est. Illud quod adventum Domini passionemque Christi antecepit, i.e., Lex et Prophetæ, Vetus dicitur. Ea vero, quæ post resurrectionem ejus scripta sunt, Novum Testamentum nominantur. Judæi Veteri utuntur, nos Novo. Sed tamen diversa non sunt, quia Novum Veteris adimpletio est, et in utroque idem testator est Christus.

<sup>1</sup> There might perhaps be printed here some fragments of a work ascribed to Polycarp, called Responsiones, first published by Feuardentius, from a Catena by Victor of Capua (sixth century). They are found in Feuardentius's Notes on Irenaeus, Haer. III. 3 (vol. II. p. 862, Stieren's Ed.). He says they were lately found by him in an old MS written in very old characters. They point out the different ways in which the four Evangelists begin their Gospels, &c. But they are not accepted by scholars as genuine: even if they were Victor's Catena they are not believed to be Polycarp's work. It is not thought worth while to print them.

At the outset are three testifying to his age and date; then comes Irenaeus's Extract from his work; next are the notable passages from Eusebius founding on Irenaeus, followed by Jerome on the same subject. <sup>2</sup> While Eusebius says that Papias acquired his information from those who were intimate with the Elders, the grounds on which he bases his opinion, and which he frankly states in the text, do not warrant his contradicting Irenaeus as he does. While Papias undoubtedly endeavoured to learn as much as possible from the friends of the Elders, his first sentence seems to claim for himself that he learned and recorded (see Introduction) what came to him direct from these Elders. In this passage he uses the word "Elder" for those who were Apostles—for Peter and Thomas, as well as for the more ambiguous Philip and James. When he calls John an Elder as well as Aristion, he does not enable us to decide on the question as to there being two Johns, one an Apostle, and one an Elder only. But the Ephesian traditions which Eusebius records are probably conclusive as to there having been two notable Elders of that name in Ephesus. It is, however, an unwarrantable inference that is drawn from this probability, when critics say that Irenaeus and others mistook Polycarp in what he said of his old leader, John, and that he really meant the Elder, while they supposed he meant the Apostle, the son of Zebedee.

<sup>6</sup> See Introduction. Papias seems merely to say that no rigid order was followed by Mark. It is not improbable that he was defending Mark against a charge brought against his authority on that account. See further traditions about Mark under the head "Mark."

<sup>7</sup> Λόγια, not necessarily "Discourses," as has of late been often alleged. Yet Jerome translates the title "Explanatio Sermonum Domini." The word λόγια seems to be equivalent in early usage to "Holy Scriptures," whether the contents be sayings or narratives. See Rom. iii. 2; Heb. v. 12; 2 Clem. 13 (and Introduction on 2 Clem.). Papias does not say that in his time there was no approved Greek version of Matthew's Gospel. It may be fairly argued that his words mean that the time for haphazard translations was past. It is Eusebius, not Papias, who refers to the "Gospel according to the Hebrews."

<sup>2</sup> Justin is here describing a common custom, so that we are to understand that the Memoirs were usually read in Christian congregations along with the Old Testament prophets on Sunday.

<sup>4</sup> Justin has the same quotation (simply as words of Jesus) twice in Apol. I. 63. In every case he has the clauses in the same order, inverting St. Matthew. In the Apol. he has ἔγνω. Matthew has παρεδόθη, ἐπιγινώσκει, and βούληται . . .

<sup>1</sup> See above. There can be no doubt that Justin does not here correctly quote any one of our Canonical authorities. It is possible that he intended to give (as he certainly does give) an account substantially corresponding to that of the Memoirs, "not merely quotations of words, but concise narratives" (Westcott, Canon, p. 116, third edition). But it is more probable that he intended to give the very words and failed. In those days (as any minister's experience will testify in our own days) the words of institution when given from memory were seldom quoted with perfect accuracy from any one source. Justin was too familiar with the words to think of turning to the Gospel MS for them; and yet his very familiarity was not in favour of verbal accuracy. There is no need to suppose (though there is no reason why we should not admit it if necessary) that Justin's own words are found in some one written authority. Hence it is a fallacy to say "Justin is giving an account of the most solemn sacrament of his religion. Here if ever we might reasonably expect accuracy and care" (Supernatural Religion, I p. 390, second edition). See Luke xxii. 17; 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25, for words most nearly Justin's. Compare Mat. xxvi. 26; Mark xiv. 22.

<sup>2</sup> This quotation (from Memoirs?) is verbally exact so far as regards the last part (Mat. xvii. 13) introduced by γέγραπται. The earlier part has ἐλεύσεται for ἔρχεται; and ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ for ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ, both being such changes as Justin is in the habit of making, that the Greek may take a less peculiar form than in the Gospels. The omission of ἐν before αὐτῷ is now confirmed by the best MSS. This is also the reading of Mark ix. 13. Justin has the future ἐλεύσεται before in the same chapter. See also p. 268 C.

(Mat. iv. 9, 10; Luke iv. 7, 8.)

<sup>4</sup> See also Apol. I. c. 38. Justin is arguing from the fulfilment of Psalm xxii., where it is said that enemies pierced the sufferer's hands and feet, and stared upon him &c., and his words are an undeniable amplification of the canonical account. It is not unreasonable to suppose that of those last deeds done at Jerusalem there were many accounts; and that Justin in these two passages consciously or unconsciously departs from the Memoirs as we have them. But his source we do not know. In the Apol. the words are, Καὶ πάλιν ὅταν λέγῃ· Ἐτάλησαν ἐν χεῖλεσιν, ἐκίνησαν κεφαλὴν λέγοντες· Ὑψάσω ἑαυτόν. (Ps. xxii. 7, 8.) Ἄτιναπάντα ὅτι γέγονεν ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων τῷ Χριστῷ, μαθεῖν δύνασθε. Σταυρωθέντος γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἐξέστρεφον τὰ χεῖλη καὶ ἐκίνουν τὰς κεφαλὰς λέγοντες· Ὁ νεκροὺς ἀνεγείρας ῥυσάσω ἑαυτόν.

<sup>5</sup> A comparison of this narrative with the narratives of Matthew and Luke shows various divergences of small moment. Thus ὀπίσω μου is inserted (as in Cod. D), though contrary to the best MSS, and the Aorist προσκύνησεν stands instead of ἐὰν προσκυνήσῃς, and the words γέγραπται γάρ are omitted. This is only like Justin's usual inaccurate mode of quotation. On the ground of the inaccuracies, it has been argued that Justin had another MS authority than our Gospels before him here. But it so happens that Justin again quotes the same passage (Dial. c. 125. p. 354 D) saying, ὡς προεῖπον, προσῆλθεν αὐτῷ ὁ διάβολος, and then goes on to speak of προσκυνῆσαι αὐτόν, giving as Christ's final answer γέγραπται· Κύριον τὸν Θεόν σου προσκυνήσεις καὶ αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις. Here he omits the ὀπίσω μου and inserts γέγραπται, a significant commentary on the futility of arguing as though Justin were minutely accurate, or even strictly consistent with himself, in his quotations.

*Eus. H. E. III. 37. <sup>1</sup> The 'Epistle to Diognetus' was at one time ascribed to Justin Martyr on the strength of a title apparently ascribing it to him in a MS of probably the thirteenth or fourteenth century. It follows some works in Justin's name, but not now regarded as his. The Ep. to Diognetus makes ample use of Paul, and if it were Justin's would be very valuable. The external objections to the Justinian authorship are: (1) It is not quoted or alluded to—so far as is known—by any Christian writer of antiquity. (2) The MS itself (which was burned in the fires of Strassburg during the recent Franco-German war) is of very dubious authority. (It is not absolutely inconceivable that Henry Stephens, its editor, was also its author. See Donaldson, Christian Literature, II. 142.) Its value is disputed on the following internal grounds: (1) Its style is not Justin's. (2) Its use of Scripture is not like Justin's. (3) Its mode of dealing with the religions of Judea, Greece, and Rome is not Justin's. To (1) and (2) plausible replies may be easily made; but (3) seems to me insurmountable. Justin's respectful, though faithful, handling of the great faiths with which Christianity contended is very unlike the contemptuous tone of the writer of the Epistle. While the reference in the text is given for the sake of completeness, it cannot be founded upon. The date may be from the end of the second to the beginning of the fourth century; or it may be the fiction of a later time. It follows Justin here, because of its association with his works. The text is from Gebhardt and Harnack (1875). The eleventh and twelfth chapters are supposed by some to be by a later hand than the ten which precede. See Cotterill's Peregrinus Proteus, p. 131.

<sup>1</sup> There can be no doubt from the context that Eusebius is describing the first age after the Apostles. The words with which he closes the paragraph and introduces Ignatius and Clement of Rome are interesting to the student of ecclesiastical offices, as well as useful for our present purpose. He says: 'Ἀδυνάτου δὲ ὄντος ἡμῖν ἅπαντας ἐξ ὀνόματος ἀπαριθμεῖσθαι, ὅσοι ποτὲ κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐκκλησίας γεγόνασι ποιμένες ἢ καὶ εὐαγγελισταί, τούτων εἰκότως ἐξ ὀνόματος γραφῇ μόνων τὴν μνῆμην κατεδέμεθα, ὧν ἔτι καὶ νῦν εἰς ἡμᾶς δι' ὑπομνημάτων τῆς ἀποστολικῆς διδασκαλίας ἡ παράδοσις φέρεται. He says that very many marvellous miracles were wrought (εἰσέτι τότε) by those men. There is an interesting passage in 2 Clement, c. 2, where after quoting Is. liv. 1 &c. the writer says: 'Ἐπεὶ ἔρημος ἐδόκει εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ὁ λαὸς ἡμῶν, νυνὶ δὲ πιστευσάντες πλείονες ἐγενόμεθα τῶν δοκούντων ἔχειν Θεόν. By οἱ δοκοῦντες he no doubt meant the Jews; and by λαός he seems from the context to have meant the Christian community.

B. III. 1. Non enim per alios dispositionem salutis nostrae cognovimus, quam per eos per quos evangelium pervenit ad nos: quod quidem tunc praeconaverunt, postea vero per Dei voluntatem in Scripturis nobis tradiderunt, fundamentum et columnam fidei nostrae futurum. Nec enim fas est dicere, quoniam ante praedicaverunt quam perfectam haberent agnitionem; sicut quidam audent dicere, gloriantes emendatores se esse apostolorum. Postea enim quam surrexit Dominus noster a mortuis et induti sunt supervenientis Spiritus Sancti virtutem ex alto, de omnibus adimpleti sunt, et habuerunt perfectam agnitionem; exierunt in fines terrae, ea quae a Deo nobis bona sunt evangelizantes, et coelestem pacem hominibus annuntiantes, qui quidem et omnes pariter et singuli eorum habentes evangelium Dei.

<sup>1</sup> Quadratus presented his Apology to Hadrian, and it was known to Eusebius, who praises it in high terms. It was a vindication of the purity of the life of Christians. From his statement that some of those on whom the Saviour's miracles had been wrought survived to his time, it is possible that he is the same Quadratus of whom the historian speaks elsewhere as having the gift of prophecy at the time when the daughters of Philip were similarly endowed (H. E. III. 37). It is not certain that he was the Athenian Bishop mentioned in the letter of Dionysius of Corinth (Eus. H. E. IV. 23). Nor indeed is anything more known of him with certainty than what Eusebius says in introducing the extract in our text.—He adds that Aristides also presented an Apology along with Quadratus (παράπλησιως) which was extant in the possession of very many. At the same date (the time of Hadrian) Agrippa Castor wrote against Basilides (Eus. H. E. IV. 7). He was the first who wrote against heresy. The writings of Tatian, Athenagoras, Theophilus, and Melito are quoted in our text. With those mentioned in this note and the doubtful Hermias they make up the 'Apologists.' See Donaldson, 'Hist. of Christian Literature and Doctrine,' II. 4.

<sup>2</sup> See further Eus. H. E. II. 15; III. 24; VI. 14. The traditions regarding the origin of the Gospels vary. Regarding Matthew's Gospel and its relation to the Gospel of the Hebrews, see Introduction, 'Gospel of Hebrews.' As regards Mark, whether ἔξοδον means death or departure from the city, Irenæus is in conflict with Eus. H. E. VI. 14, because Eusebius distinctly says Peter was made aware of Mark's Gospel. See also II. 16. Ἐκδοσιν for ἔξοδον is probably an attempt to get over the difficulty. As regards Mark's relation to Peter, and Luke's to Paul, traditionary testimony agrees, that in each case the Evangelist reduced to writing the substance of his Master's teaching. As regards John, see Introduction, and the passages quoted below; and compare Clement's account (below, p. 74).

Ἐπειδὴ . . . τέσσαρα κλίματα τοῦ κόσμου, ἐν ᾧ ἔσμεν· εἰσὶ, καὶ τέσσαρα καθολικὰ πνεύματα, κατέσπαρται δὲ ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐπὶ πάσης τῆς γῆς, στίλος δὲ καὶ στήριγμα ἐκκλησίας τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, καὶ πνεῦμα ζωῆς· εἰκότως τέσσαρας ἔχειν αὐτὴν στίλους, πανταχόθεν πνέοντας τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν, καὶ ἀναζωπυροῦντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους. <sup>4</sup> See before, note on Justin, Dial. c. 227. Ign. Philad. c. 5 has apparently εὐαγγέλιον and ἀπόστολοι, as the divisions of the N. T. The 'Gospel' and the 'Apostles' became well-known divisions after Clem. Alex. The Greek of the following notable passage was found by Grabe in the Quaestiones of Anastasius Sinaita.

Ἰαβίδ, υἱοῦ Ἀβραάμ. Καὶ τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἡ γέννησις οὕτως ἦν. Ἀνθρωπόμορφον οὖν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦτο. . . . . Μάρκος δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ προφητικοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ ἐξ ὕψους ἐπιόντος τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐποιήσατο, λέγων· Ἀρχὴ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὡς γέγραπται ἐν Ἑσαΐα τῷ προφήτῃ· τὴν πτερωτικὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ εὐαγγελίου δεικνύων· διὰ τοῦτο δὲ καὶ σύντομον καὶ παρατρέχουσαν τὴν καταγγελίαν πεποιήται· προφητικὸς γὰρ ὁ χαρακτήρ οὗτος. Καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῖς μὲν πρὸ Μωϋσέως πατριάρχαις, κατὰ τὸ θεῖόν καὶ ἔνδοξον ὠμίλει· τοῖς δὲ ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, ἱερατικὴν . . . τάξιν ἀπένειμε. Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα ἄνθρωπος γενόμενος, τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος εἰς λαὸν ἐξέπεμψε τὴν γῆν, σκεπάζων ἡμᾶς ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ πτέρυξιν. Ὅποια οὖν ἡ πραγματεία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοιαύτη καὶ τῶν ζώων ἡ μορφή· καὶ ὅποια ἡ τῶν ζώων μορφή, τοιοῦτος καὶ ὁ χαρακτήρ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Τετράμορφα γὰρ τὰ ζῶα, τετράμορφον καὶ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, καὶ ἡ πραγματεία τοῦ Κυρίου. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο μέσσαρες ἐδόθησαν καθολικαὶ διαθήκαι τῇ ἀνθρωπότητι· μία μὲν τοῦ κατακλισμοῦ τοῦ Νῶε, ἐπὶ τοῦ τόξου· δευτέρα δὲ τοῦ Ἀβραάμ ἐπὶ τοῦ σημείου τῆς περιτομῆς· τρίτη δὲ ἡ νομοθεσία ἐπὶ τοῦ Μωϋσέως· τετάρτη δὲ ἡ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

promisit; sed simul et Evangelium, et propheticum repellunt spiritum. Infelices vere, qui pseudoprophetae quidem esse volunt, prophetiae vero gratiam repellunt ab ecclesia: similia patientes his, qui propter eos qui in hypocrisi veniunt, etiam a fratrum communicatione se abstinere.<sup>9</sup> Datur autem intelligi, quod hujusmodi neque apostolum Paulum recipiant. In ea enim Epistola, quae est ad Corinthios, de prophetis charismatibus diligenter locutus est, et scit viros et mulieres in ecclesia prophetantes. Per haec igitur omnia peccantes in Spiritum Dei, in irremissibile incidunt peccatum. Hi vero, qui sunt a Valentino, iterum existentes extra omnem timorem, suas conscriptiones proferentes, plura habere gloriantur, quam sint ipsa Evangelia. Siquidem in tantum processerunt audaciae, uti quod ab his non olim conscriptum est, Veritatis Evangelium titulent, in nihilo conveniens apostolorum evangelii, ut nec evangelium quidem sit apud eos sine blasphemia. Si enim, quod ab eis profertur, Veritatis est Evangelium, dissimile est autem hoc illis, quae ab apostolis nobis tradita sunt; qui volunt, possunt discere, quemadmodum ex ipsis scripturis ostenditur, jam non esse id quod ab apostolis traditum est Veritatis Evangelium. Quoniam autem sola illa vera et firma, et non capit neque plura, praeterquam praedicta sunt, neque pauciora esse Evangelia, per tot et tanta ostendimus. Et enim cum omnia composita et apta Deus fecerit, oportebat et speciem Evangelii bene compositam, et bene compaginatum esse. Examined igitur sententia eorum qui nobis tradiderunt evangelium, ex ipsis principiis ipsorum, veniamus et ad reliquos apostolos, et perquiramus sententiam eorum de Deo: post deinde, ipsos Domini sermones audiamus.

WHOSE TESTIMONY IRENAEUS REPORTS UPON.

Iren. IV. 32. 1. Hujusmodi quoque de duobus Testamentis senior apostolorum discipulus disputabat, ab uno quidem et eodem Deo utraque ostendens. Nec enim esse alterum Deum praeter eum qui fecit et plasmavit nos, nec firmitatem habere sermonem eorum qui dicunt aut per angelos aut per aliam quamlibet virtutem aut ab alio Deo factum esse hunc mundum qui est secundum nos. . . Si autem credat quis unum Deum, et qui verbo omnia fecit quemadmodum et Moses ait: Dixit Deus fiat lux et facta est lux (Gen. i. 3); et in Evangelio legimus: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil, &c.

B. II. 22. 5. <sup>2</sup>Quia autem XXX annorum aetas prima indolis est juvenis, et extenditur usque ad XL annorum, omnibus quilibet confitebitur; a XL autem et L anno declinat jam in aetatem seniore, quam habens Dominus noster docebat, sicut evangelium καὶ πάντες οἱ πρεσβύτεροι μαρτυροῦσιν, οἱ κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν Ἰωάννη τῷ τοῦ Κυρίου μαθητῇ συμβεβληχότες, παραδεδομένα ταῦτα τὸν Ἰωάννην. Παρέμεινε γὰρ αὐτοῖς μέχρι τῶν Τραιανοῦ χρόνων. Quidam autem eorum non solum Joannem sed et alios apostolos viderunt, et haec eadem ab ipsis audierunt, et testantur de hujusmodi relatione. Quibus majus oportet credi? Utrumne his talibus, an Ptolemaco, qui apostolos nunquam vidit, vestigium autem apostoli ne in somniis quidem assecutus est?

<sup>1</sup> Eus. H. E. V. 8 says of Irenaeus: Καὶ Ἀπομνημονευμάτων [Ὑπομνημάτων] δὲ ἀποστολικῶν τινὸς πρεσβυτέρου, οὗ τοῦνομα σιωπῇ παρέδωκε μνημονεύει· ἐξηγήσεις τε αὐτοῦ βιβλίων γραφῶν παρατίθεται. Eusebius had not a clue to the name of this Presbyter (he seems to have thought there was but one, or is it but one whose writings were accessible?); and modern conjecture is vain. It can scarcely have been Polycarp or Papias. Sometimes Irenaeus calls his authority ὁ κορείσων ἡμῶν (I. Pref. 2, I. 13. 3 &c.), superior (III. 17. 4). Sometimes he defines him. Thus, Quemadmodum audiavi a quodam Presbytero, qui audierat ab his qui apostolos viderant et ab iis qui didicerant (IV. 27. 1 &c.). Again he quotes from senior apostolorum discipulus (IV. 32. 1). In our second extract (II. 22. 5) he connects his authorities with John. Elsewhere he calls his authority ὁ βεῖος πρεσβύτερος καὶ κήρυξ τῆς ἀληθείας and ὁ βεοφιλῆς πρεσβύτερος.

<sup>2</sup> Irenaeus is opposing the idea that our Lord's ministry lasted only for one year. He argues that when our Lord was baptized He was not of full age to be a teacher, as Luke iii. 23 does not say He had completed 30 years. He seems to found upon John viii. 57. The Greek is from Eus. H. E. III. 23.

Novissima inimica destruetur mors. In temporibus enim regni justus homo super terram existens, obliviscetur mori jam* (1 Cor. xv. 27). *Quando autem dixerit, inquit: omnia subjecta sunt scilicet absque eo qui subjecit omnia. <sup>1</sup> Tatian, a native of Assyria, a rhetorician by profession, disgusted with heathenism, was converted to Christianity. He is said to have been a hearer of Justin (Iren. I. 28. 1 quoted by Eus. H. E. IV. 29). He appears to have published some heretical notions soon after A.D. 170. He held peculiar views about aeons; declared marriage to be corruption; and denied that Adam could be saved. He objected to the O. T., probably because of its recognizing polygamy. His view of the O. T. made him like a Gnostic; but he seems to have been a follower of no School. His only extant work is his Oration to the Greeks, written in the reign of Marcus Aurelius (quoted below, see 'Gospel of John'). His most famous work Διὰ τεσσάρων is lost. It is to it Eusebius refers in the text. Eusebius also quotes as a report (λόγος ἔχει) that Tatian was the founder (ἀρχηγόν) of the Eneratites, who denounced marriage; but his quotation from Irenaeus only bears that the sect of the Eneratites derived from Tatian their recently adopted opinion that Adam was beyond salvation. Eusebius did not know what kind of thing the Διὰ τεσσάρων was. It seems to have been a Harmony or blending of the four Gospels. Theodoret's account (in next extract) is probable enough; and the omission of the genealogies might be part of the work which Tatian thought it necessary to do in order to compile a concise and consistent narrative from the four Gospels. Epiphanius says, "The Gospel by the four (τὸ διὰ τεσσάρων) is said to have been made by him, which some call the Gospel according to the Hebrews." Victor of Capua (sixth century) says it was called Dia Pente, but this assertion has no weight. Some think that he meant διὰ πάντων, others that he mistook the book. (See Donaldson, Christian Literature, II. 26, and the whole of his exhaustive discussion.) See below, under Matthew's Gospel, a disputed passage.

<sup>2</sup> Theodoret was Bishop of Cyrus in Syria from about A.D. 420, and died A.D. 457. He was a voluminous author, writing a History of the Church, Commentaries on Scripture, &c. His objection to Tatian's book is founded on the absence of the genealogies; and he seems to have known no other fault,—τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα being vague enough to mean anything or nothing.

<sup>1</sup> Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch about A.D. 180-193; the sixth from the Apostles, says Eusebius (H. E. IV. 20, 24). He is said to have written a Harmony. His chief work—to Autolycus—in three Books, survives. Eusebius calls it elementary (στοιχειώδη). It is a discourse composed at different times in three parts to show the superiority of Christianity to heathenism. He founds largely upon the O. T. He is the first to quote the Gospel of John by name (see below, John's Gospel), but he refers to several books of the N. T., and explicitly quotes 1 Timothy (see below). He wrote a book against Marcion which is lost. Some 'Commentaries on the Gospels' in Latin bearing his name are extant, but are not allowed by scholars to be his. Eusebius says that in writing against the heresy of Hermogenes he used testimonies from the Apocalypse. He cites Paul's Epistle as ἡτοῦ λόγος. The passage in our text puts the New Testament and the Old on the same level; and the same word πνευματόφοροι is used in the citation from John, so that αἱ ἁγία γραφαί probably includes John in that case. The way in which he quotes Matthew and John, his work against Marcion, and his Commentaries or his Harmony, may serve to show the acceptance of the Gospels in his time.

<sup>3</sup> Compare what is said by Irenaeus (p. 67). The discrepancy may be removed by supposing that Peter did not know at first of the request made to Mark, that he neither approved nor disapproved of the writing of the Gospel, but that when it was written he was pleased with it, and sanctioned (tacitly or expressly) its circulation. But is it necessary to explain a discrepancy like this which marks the variations of a tradition?

<sup>4</sup> The way in which Clement here quotes the Gospel of the Egyptians is significant. To say (as the author of 'Supernatural Religion' says, I. 422) that "Clement of Alexandria quotes the Gospel of the Hebrews as an authority with quite the same respect as the other Gospels" is incorrect, as may be seen from the distinct place assigned by Clement to the four canonical Gospels in the text. (See below, 'Gospel of Hebrews.')

structuram ordinem quem aggredimur. Constituimus in primis, evangelicum Instrumentum apostolos auctores habere, quibus hoc munus evangelii promulgandi ab ipso Domino sit impositum; si et apostolicos, non tamen solos, sed cum apostolis, et post apostolos. Quoniam praedicatio discipulorum suspecta fieri posset de gloriae studio, si non adsistat illi auctoritas magistrorum, immo Christi, quae magistros apostolos fecit. Denique, nobis fidem ex apostolis Joannes et Matthaeus insinuant; ex apostolicis, Lucas et Marcus instaurant, iisdem regulis exorsi, quantum ad unicum Deum attinet Creatorem, et Christum ejus, natum ex Virgine, supplementum Legis et Prophetarum. Viderit enim si narratio-num dispositio variavit, dummodo de capite fidei conveniat, de quo cum Marcione non convenit. Contra Marcion, Evangelio, scilicet suo, nullum adscribit auctorem, quasi non licuerit illi titulum quoque affingere, cui nefas non fuit ipsum corpus evertere. Et possem hic jam gradum figere, non agnoscendum contendens opus, quod non erigat frontem, quod nullam constantiam praeferat, nullam fidem repromittat de plenitudine tituli, et professione debita auctoris. Sed per omnia congrédi malumus, nec dissimulamus quod ex nostro intellegi potest. Nam ex iis commentatoribus quos habemus, Lucam videtur Marcion elegisse, quem caederet.<sup>2</sup> Porro Lucas non apostolus, sed apostolicus: non ma-to Tertullian), and is said to have been expelled from the Church because of his crimes. His activity in Rome began about A.D. 135-142, probably about A.D. 141. Justin (A.D. 139-148 (?), see Introduction) writes of him as well-known, and followed by many in every nation. His main idea was the usual Gnostic one of antagonism between the Old and New Testaments; and he held that the Jewish God was not He whom Jesus preached. He published a Canon: one Gospel, 'The Gospel of the Lord' = a mutilated Luke, and 10 Epp. of Paul called ἀπόστολος. His Epp. were Gal., Cor. (2), Rom., Thess. (2), Eph., Coloss., Philem., Philipp., and some passages from that "to the Laodiceans." His version of the Gospel of Luke is published by Hahn (Thilo, Cod. Apoc.). Rejecting the opening chapters, he began with the Lord's appearance in the synagogue of Capernaum. The life and death of Jesus are retained with such changes as he thought necessary,—e.g., in Luke xxiv. 25 he omits the reference to the prophets. His great work was called Antitheses—i.e., Antagonism between the Old Testament and the New.

gister, sed discipulus; utique magistro minor; certe tanto posterior, quanto posterioris apostoli sectator, Pauli sine dubio: ut, etsi sub ipsius Pauli nomine Evangelium Marcion intulisset, non sufficeret ad fidem singularitas Instrumenti, destituta patrocínio antecessorum; exigeretur enim id quoque Evangelium quod Paulus invenit, cui fidem dedidit, cui mox suum congruere gestiit. Siquidem (Gal. ii. 1) propterea Ierosolymam ascendit ad cognoscendos apostolos, et consultandos, ne forte in vacuum cucurrisset, i.e., ne non secundum illos credidisset, et non secundum illos evangelizaret. Denique, ut cum auctoribus contulit et convenit de regula fidei, dexteris miscuere, et exinde officia praedicandi distinxerunt, ut illi in Judaeos, Paulus in Judaeos et in nationes. Igitur si ipse illuminator Lucae, auctoritatem antecessorum et fidei et praedicationi suae optavit, quanto magis eam Evangelio Lucae expostulem, quae evangelio magistri ejus fuit necessaria? Aliud est, si penes Marcionem a discipulatu Lucae coepit religionis Christianae sacramentum. Caeterum, si et retro decucurrit, habuit utique authenticam paraturam, per quam ad Lucam usque pervenit, cujus testimonio assistente, Lucas quoque possit admitti.

C. 3. Sed enim Marcion nactus epistolam Pauli ad Galatas, etiam ipsos apostolos suggillantem (Gal. ii), ut non recto pede incedentes ad veritatem evangelii, simul et accusantis pseudapostolos quosdam pervertentes evangelium Christi, conmittitur ad destruendum statum eorum Evangeliorum, quae propria et sub apostolorum nomine eduntur, vel etiam apostolicorum; ut scilicet fidem, quam illis adimit, suo conferat. Porro, etsi reprehensus est Petrus et Joannes et Jacobus, qui existimabantur columnae, manifesta causa est.<sup>3</sup> Personarum enim respectu videbantur variare convictum. Et tamen, cum ipse Paulus omnibus omnia fieret, ut omnes lucraretur (1 Cor. ix. 19), potuit et made repeatedly, and testifies to the fact of the mutilation of St. Paul's Epistles and of St. Luke's Gospel (see before in the quotations from Iren. I. 27. 2, &c., and afterwards under 'Marcion'). Justin, writing about A.D. 147, says that Marcion's doctrines were widespread. The difference in N. T. readings between Marcion's copy of Luke and that known to Tertullian throws the Gospel back to a considerably anterior date; as the readings show that Marcion's copy was the result of repeated transcription.

Petro hoc in consilio fuisse, aliquid aliter agendi, quam docebat. Proinde si et pseudapostoli irrepserant, horum quoque qualitas edita est, circumcisionem vindicantium et Judaicos fastos. Ideo non de praedicatione, sed de conversatione, a Paulo denotabantur; aequae denotaturo, si quid de Deo creatore, aut Christo ejus errassent. Igitur distinguenda erunt singula. Si apostolos praevaricationis et simulationis suspectos Marcion haberi queritur usque ad Evangelii<sup>4</sup> depravationem, Christum jam accusat, accusando quos Christus elegit. Si vero apostoli quidem integrum evangelium contulerunt, de sola convictus inaequalitate reprehensi, pseudapostoli autem veritatem eorum interpolaverunt, et inde sunt nostra Digesta; quod erit germanum illud apostolorum Instrumentum, quod adulteros passum est? Quod Paulum illuminavit, et ab eo Lucam? Aut si tam funditus deletum est, ut cataclysmo quodam, ita inundatione falsariorum oblitteratum; jam ergo nec Marcion habet verum. Aut si ipsum erit verum, id est apostolorum, quod Marcion habet solus; et quomodo nostro consonat, quod non apostolorum, sed Lucae refertur? Aut si non statim Lucae deputandum est, quo Marcion utitur; quia nostro consonat, scilicet adulterato etiam circa titulum; caeterum apostolorum est; jam ergo et nostrum quod illi consonat, aequae apostolorum est, sed adulteratum de titulo quoque.

C. 4. Funis ergo ducendus est contentionis, pari hinc inde nisu fluctuante. Ego meum dico verum, Marcion suum. Ego Marcionis affirmo adulteratum, Marcion meum. Quis inter nos determinabit, nisi temporis ratio, ei praescribens auctoritatem, quod antiquius reperietur; et ei praejudicans vitiationem, quod posterius revincetur? In quantum enim falsum corruptio est veri, in tantum praecedat necesse est veritas falsum. Prior erit res passione, et materia aemulatione. Alioquin, quam absurdum ut si nostrum antiquius probaverimus, Marcionis vero posterius; et nostrum ante videatur falsum quam habuerit de veritate materiam, et Marcionis ante credatur aemulationem a nostro expertum quam et editum, et postremo id verius existimetur, quod est serius post tot ac tanta jam opera atque documenta Christianae religionis seculo edita, quae edi utique non potuissent sine Evangelii veritate, id est ante Evangelii veritatem. Quod ergo pertinet ad Evangelium interim Lucae, quatenus communio ejus inter nos et Marcionem de veritate disceptat, adeo antiquius Marcione est, quod est secundum nos, ut et ipse illi Marcion aliquando crediderit; quum et pecuniam in primo calore fidei catholicae ecclesiae contulit, projectam mox cum ipso postea quam in haeresim suam a nostra veritate descivit. Quid nunc si negaverint Marcionitae, primam apud nos fidem ejus, adversus epistolam quoque ipsius? Quid si nec epistolam agnoverint? Certe Antitheses non modo fatentur Marcionis, sed et praeferunt. Ex his mihi probatio sufficit. Si enim id Evangelium quod Lucae refertur penes nos (viderimus an et penes Marcionem) ipsum est quod Marcion per Antitheses suas arguit, ut interpolatum a protectoribus Judaismi ad concorporationem Legis et Prophetarum, quae etiam Christum inde confingerent, utique non potuisset arguere, nisi quod invenerat. Nemo post futura reprehendit, quae ignorat futura: emendatio culpam non antecedit. Emendator sane evangelii a Tiberianis usque ad Antoniniana tempora eversi, Marcion solus et primus obvenit, expectatus tamdiu a Christo, poenitente jam quod apostolos praemisisse properasset sine praesidio Marcionis; nisi quod humanae temeritatis, non divinae auctoritatis negotium est haeresis, quae sic semper emendat Evangelia, dum vitiat: quum etsi discipulus Marcion, non tamen super magistrum (Mat. x. 24). Et si apostolus Marcion, Sive ego, inquit Paulus (1 Cor. xv. 11), sive illi, sic praedicamus. Et si prophetae Marcion: et spiritus prophetarum prophetis erunt subditi (1 Cor. xiv. 32). Non enim eversionis sunt, sed pacis. Etiam si angelus Marcion, citius (Gal. i. 8) anathema dicendus quam evangelizator, quia aliter evangelizavit. Itaque dum emendat, utrumque confirmat, et nostrum antea, id emendans quod invenit, et id posterius, quod de nostri emendatione constituens, suum et novum fecit.

C. 5. In summa, si constat id verius quod prius, id prius quod et ab initio, id ab initio, quod ab apostolis, pariter utique constabit; id esse ab apostolis traditum, quod apud ecclesias apostolorum fuerit sacrosanctum. Videamus quod lac a Paulo Corinthii hauserint, ad quam regulam Galatae sint reorrecti, quid legant Philippenses, Thessalonicenses, Ephesii; quid etiam Romani de proximo sonent, quibus evangelium et Petrus et Paulus sanguine quoque suo signatum reliquerunt. Habemus et Joannis alumnas ecclesias. Nam etsi Apocalypsin ejus Marcion respuit, ordo tamen episcoporum ad originem recensens, in Joannem stabit auctorem. Sic et caeterarum generositas recognoscitur. Dico itaque apud illas, nec solas jam apostolicas, sed apud universas, quae illis de societate sacramenti confoederantur, id Evangelium Lucae ab initio editionis suae stare, quod cum maxime tuemur: Marcionis vero, plerisque nec notum; nullis autem notum, ut non eadem damnatum. Habet plane et illud ecclesias, sed suas, tam posteras quam adulteras, quarum si censum requiras, facilius apostaticum invenias quam apostolicum; Marcione scilicet conditore, vel aliquo de Marcionis examine. Faciunt favos et vespae; faciunt ecclesias et Marcionitae. Eadem auctoritas ecclesiarum apostolicarum caeteris quoque patrocina-bitur Evangeliis, quae proinde per illas, et secundum illas habemus, Joannis dico et Matthaei, licet et Marcus quod edidit, Petri affirmetur, cujus interpretes Marcus. Nam et Lucae Digestum Paulo adscribere solent. Capit magistrorum videri, quae discipuli promulgarint. Itaque et de his Marcion flagitandus, quod omissis eis, Lucae potius institerit, quasi non et haec apud ecclesias a primordio fuerint, quemadmodum et Lucae. Atquin haec magis a primordio fuisse credibile est, ut priora, qua apostolica, ut cum ipsis ecclesiis dedicata. Caeterum, quale est, si nihil apostoli ediderunt, ut discipuli potius ediderint, qui nec discipuli existere potuissent sine ulla doctrina magistrorum? Igitur dum constet haec quoque apud ecclesias fuisse, cur non haec quoque Marcion attigit, aut emendanda si adulterata, aut agnoscenda si integra? Nam et competit, ut si qui Evangelium pervertebant eorum magis curarent perversionem, quorum sciebant auctoritatem receptionem. Ideo et pseudapostoli, quod per falsum apostolos imitarentur. In quantum ergo emendasset quae fuissent emendanda, si fuissent corrupta, in tantum confirmavit non fuisse corrupta, quae non putavit emendanda. Denique emendavit, quod corruptum existimavit. Sed nec hoc merito, quia non fuit corruptum. Si enim apostolica integre decucurrerunt, Lucae autem, quod est secundum nos, adeo congruit regulae eorum, ut cum illis apud ecclesias maneat, jam et Lucae constat integrum decucurrisse

cionis intulit, tunc diversum et aemulum factum est apostolicis.
Igitur dabo consilium discipulis ejus, ut aut illa convertant, licet sero, ad formam sui, quo cum apostolicis convenire videantur (nam et quotidie reformant illud, prout a nobis quotidie revincuntur), aut erubescant de magistro utrobique traducto, cum Evangelii veritatem nunc ex conscientia tramittit; nunc ex impudentia evertit. His fere compendiis utimur, quum de Evangelii fide adversus haereticos expeditur, defendentibus et temporum ordinem posteritati falsariorum praescribentem, et auctoritatem ecclesiarum traditioni apostolorum patrocinantem, quia veritas falsum praecedat necesse est, et ab eis procedat, a quibus tra-dita est.

C. 6. Sed alium jam hinc inimus gradum, ipsum (ut professi sumus) Evangelium Marcionis provocantes, sic quoque probaturi adulteratum. Certe enim totum, quod elaboravit, etiam Antitheses praestruendo, in hoc cogit, ut Veteris et Novi Testamenti diversitatem constituat; proinde Christum suum a creatore separatum, ut Dei alterius, ut alienum Legis et Prophetarum.

Et ut sciatis, non solum quatuor Evangelia, sed plurima esse conscripta, e quibus haec, quae habemus, electa sunt, et tradita ecclesiis, ex ipso prooemio Lucae, quod ita contextitur, cognoscamus: Quoniam quidem multi conati sunt ordinare narrationem. Hoc quod ait, conati sunt, latentem habet accusationem eorum qui absque gratia Spiritus Sancti ad scribenda Evangelia prosilierunt. Matthaeus quippe, et Marcus, et Joannes, et Lucas non sunt conati scribere; sed Spiritu Sancto pleni scripserunt Evangelia. Multi igitur conati sunt ordinare narrationem de his rebus quae manifestissime cognitae sunt in nobis. Ecclesia quatuor habet Evangelia, haereses plurima: e quibus quoddam scribitur secundum Aegyptios, aliud juxta Duodecim Apostolos. Ausus fuit et Basilides scribere Evangelium, et suo illud nomine titolare. Multi conati sunt scribere; sed et multi conati sunt ordinare. Quatuor tantum Evangelia sunt probata, e quibus sub persona Domini et Sal-

The former, פְּרִי־הָאָרְצָה, πρωτογεννήματα, he finds in the law of Moses; the latter, פְּרִי־הָאָרְצָה, ἀπαρχή, is the Gospel. Lardner translates literally "first-begotten" and "first-fruits." See Num. xxviii. 26, &c. פְּרִי־הָאָרְצָה הַזֶּה, day of first-fruits, is Pentecost. See Oehler, O. T. Theology, vol. II § 155.

Ἐπέστειλάς μοι, πιστότατε καὶ λογιώτατε νιέ μου, πυνθανόμενος καθ' ἣν ὥραν ἀπονησιτίζεσθαι δεῖ τῇ τοῦ πάσχα περιλύσει. Τινὰς μὲν γὰρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν λέγειν φησὶ ὅτι χρὴ τοῦτο ποιεῖν πρὸς τὴν ἀλεκτοροφωνίαν, τινὰς δὲ, ὅτι ἀφ' ἐσπέρας χρὴ. Οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἀδελφοὶ, ὥς φασι, περιμένουσι τὸν ἀλέκτορα· περὶ δὲ τῶν ἐνταῦθα ἔλεγε, ὅτι τάχιον. Ἀκριβῆ δὲ ὅρον ἐπιτιθέναί ζητεῖς, καὶ ὥραν πάνυ μεμετρημένην· ὅπερ καὶ δύσκολον καὶ σφαλερόν ἐστι. Τὸ μὲν γὰρ, ὅτι μετὰ τὸν τῆς ἀναστάσεως τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καιρὸν χρὴ τῆς ἑορτῆς καὶ τῆς εὐφροσύνης ἐνάρχεσθαι, μέχρις ἐκείνου τὰς ψυχὰς ταῖς νηστείας ταπεινοῦντας, ὑπὸ πάντων ὁμοίως ὁμολογηθήσεται· κατεσχεύασας δὲ δι' ὧν ἔγραψάς μοι πάνυ ὑγιῶς καὶ τῶν θείων εὐαγγελίων ἡσθημένος ὅτι μηδὲν ἀπληρωμένον ἐν αὐτοῖς περὶ τῆς ὥρας καθ' ἣν ἀνέστι, φαίνεται. Διαφόρως μὲν γὰρ οἱ εὐαγγελισταὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ τὸ μνημεῖον ἐλθόντας ἀνέγραψαν κατὰ καιροὺς ἐνηλλαγμένους, καὶ πάντες ἀνεστηκότα ἤδη τὸν Κύριον ἔφασαν εὐριχέαναι· καὶ ὁππὲ σαββάτων, ὥς ὁ Ματθαῖος εἶπε· καὶ πρωΐας ἔτι σκοτίας οὕσης, ὥς ὁ Ἰωάννης γράφει· καὶ ὅρθρου βαθέος, ὥς ὁ Λουκᾶς· καὶ λίαν πρωΐ ἀνατείλαντος τοῦ ἡλίου, ὥς ὁ Μάρκος. Καὶ πότε μὲν ἀνέστι, σαφῶς οὐδεὶς ἀπεφήματο· ὅτι δὲ ὁππὲ σαββάτων τῇ ἐπιφωσκούσῃ εἰς μίαν σαββάτων, μέχρις ἀνατολῆς ἡλίου τῆς μιᾶς σαββάτων, οἱ ἐπὶ τὸ μνημεῖον παραγενόμενοι, οὐκέτι κείμενον αὐτὸν ἐν αὐτῷ κατέλαβον, τοῦτο ἀνωμολόγηται. Καὶ μηδὲ διαφωνεῖν, μηδὲ ἐναντιοῦσθαι τοῖς εὐαγγελιστὰς πρὸς ἀλλήλους ὑπολάβωμεν· ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ μικρολογία τις εἶναι δόξει περὶ τὸ ζητούμενον· εἰ συμφωνοῦντες πάντες ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ νυκτὶ τὸ τοῦ κόσμου φῶς τὸν Κύριον

Ὁ δὲ Μάρκος ὡσαύτως·

Μετὰ δὲ τὸ παραδοθῆναι,

Ἰωάννην ἦλθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν.

Καὶ ὁ Λουκᾶς δὲ πρὶν ἄρξασθαι τῶν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ πράξεων, παρὰ πλησίως ἐπιτηρεῖ φάσκων, Ὡς ἄρα προσθεῖς Ἡρώδης οἷς διεπράξατο πονηροῖς κατέκλεισε τὸν Ἰωάννην ἐν φυλακῇ.

Οὐκοῦν ὁ μὲν Ἰωάννης τῇ τοῦ κατ' αὐτὸν εὐαγγελίου γραφῇ, τὰ μηδέπω τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ εἰς φυλακὴν βεβλημένοι πρὸς τοῦ Χριστοῦ παραθέντα παραδίδωσιν, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ τρεῖς εὐαγγελισταὶ τὰ μετὰ τὴν εἰς τὸ δεσμοτήριον καθείρξιν τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ μνημονεύουσιν. Demonstratio evangel. III. 5. Ματθαῖος ἀπόστολος τὸν πρότερον βίον οὐκ ἀπὸ σεινῆς διατριβῆς ὠριᾶτο, ἐκ δὲ τῶν ἀμφὶ τὰς τελωνίας καὶ πλεονεξίας σχολαζόντων. Τοῦτο οὐδεὶς τῶν εὐαγγελιστῶν ἐδήλωσεν, οὐχ ὁ συναπόστολος αὐτοῦ Ἰωάννης, οὐδὲ γε Λουκᾶς, οὐδὲ Μάρκος, οὐδὲ Ματθαῖος τὸν ἑαυτοῦ στηλιτεύων βίον καὶ κατήγορος αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ γινόμενος. Ἐτάκουσον γοῦν ὅπως διαρρήθην ἐπ' ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ μέμνηται ἐν τῷ πρὸς αὐτοῦ γραφέντι Εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦτον λέγων τὸν τρόπον. “Καὶ παράγων ἐκείθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶδεν ἄνθρωπον καθήμενον ἐπὶ τὸ τελώνιον, Ματθαῖον ὀνόματι, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, ἀκολούθει μοι. Καὶ ἀναστὰς ἠκολούθησεν αὐτῷ. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἀνακειμένον αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, καὶ ἰδοὺ πολλοὶ τελῶναι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοὶ συνανέκειντο τῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ.” Καὶ πάλιν προΐων ἐξῆς, τὸν τε κατάλογον τῶν μαθητῶν ἐξαριθμοῦμενος, αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ τὸ τοῦ τελῶνον ὄνομα προστίθισιν. “Λέγει δ' οὖν· “Τῶν δὲ δώδεκα ἀποστόλων τὰ ὀνόματά ἐστι ταῦτα· πρῶτος Σίμων ὁ λεγόμενος Πέτρος καὶ Ἀνδρέας ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ, Ἰάκωβος ὁ τοῦ Ζεβεδαίου καὶ Ἰωάννης ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ, Φίλιππος καὶ Βαρθολομαῖος, Θωμᾶς καὶ Ματθαῖος ὁ τελώνης.” Οὕτως μὲν ὁ Ματθαῖος δι' ὑπερβολὴν ἐπιεικείας τὸ φιλάληθες ὑποφαίνων τοῦ ἰδίου τρόπου καὶ τελῶνῃ ἑαυτὸν ἀπεκάλει, μὴ ἀποκρέπτων τὸν πρότερον ἑαυτοῦ βίον, καὶ τοῦ σιζύγου δεύτερον ἑαυτὸν κατέλεγεν. Συνεξειγμένος γοῦν τῷ Θωμᾷ, ὁ Πέτρος Ἀνδρέα καὶ Ἰάκωβος τῷ Ἰωάννῃ, καὶ Φίλιππος Βαρθολομαίῳ, προτάττει ἑαυτοῦ τὸν Θωμᾶν, προτιμῶν ὡς κρείττονα τὸν συναπόστολον, τῶν λοιπῶν εὐαγγελιστῶν τοῖναντίον πεποιηκότων. “Ἀκουε γοῦν Λουκᾶ, πῶς, τοῦ Ματθαίου μνημονεύσας, οὐ τελῶνῃ ὀνομάζει, οὐδ' ὑποτάττει τῷ Θωμᾷ, κρείττονα δὲ αὐτὸν εἰδὼς, πρῶτον αὐτὸν κατέλεξεν, δεύτερον τὸν Θωμᾶν ἐπαγαγὼν, ὥσπερ καὶ ὁ Μάρκος πεποίηκεν· ἔχονσι δὲ αὐτοῦ αἱ λέξεις οὕτως· “Καὶ ὅτε ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, ἐφώνησε τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκλεξάμενος ἕξ αὐτῶν δώδεκα, οἷς καὶ ἀποστόλους ὠνόμασεν, Σίμωνα, ὃν καὶ ἐκάλεσε Πέτρον, καὶ Ἀνδρέαν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην, καὶ Φίλιππον καὶ Βαρθολομαῖον, καὶ Ματθαῖον καὶ Θωμᾶν.” Οὕτως μὲν τὸν Ματθαῖον ὁ Λουκᾶς ἐτίμησεν, καθ’ ἃ παρέδωκαν αὐτῷ οἱ ἀπαρχὴς αὐτόπται καὶ ἐπιρρέται γενόμενοι τοῦ λόγου. Καὶ τὸν Ἰωάννην δὲ ὁμοίον εὖροις ἂν τῷ Ματθαίῳ. Ἐν μὲν γὰρ ταῖς ἐπιστολαῖς αὐτοῦ οὐδὲ μνήμην τῆς οἰκειᾶς προσηγορίας ποιεῖται ἢ πρεσβύτερον ἑαυτὸν ὀνομάζει, οὐδαμοῦ δὲ ἀπόστολον, οὐδὲ ἐπαγγελιστήν· ἐν δὲ τῷ Εὐαγγελίῳ ἐπισημνιάμενος, ὃν ἡγάπα ὁ Ἰησοῦς, οὐκ ἐδήλωσεν ὀνομασθὲν ἑαυτόν.

Ὁ γε μὴν Πέτρος οὐδὲ καθῆκεν ἐπὶ τὴν Εὐαγγελίῳ γραφὴν δι’ ἐνλαβείας ὑπερβολήν. Τούτου Μάρκος γνώριμος καὶ φρονητὴς γεγονὼς ἀποκηρυχθεὶς λέγεται τὰς τοῦ Πέτρου περὶ τῶν πράξεων τοῦ Ἰησοῦ διαλέξεις, ὃς ἔλθων ἐπ’ ἐκεῖνα τῆς ἱστορίας, ἐν οἷς ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐρωτήσας, τίνα φασὶν αὐτὸν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, καὶ αὐτοὶ δὲ οἱ αὐτοῦ μαθηταί, τίνα δόξαν ἔχουσι περὶ αὐτοῦ, ἐπακούσαντος τοῦ Πέτρου, ὡς περὶ Χριστοῦ, οὐδὲν ἀποκρινάμενον τὸν Ἰησοῦν οὐδὲ λέγοντα αὐτῷ γράφει, ἀλλ’ ὅτι ἐπετίμησεν αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μηδεὶν λέγωσι περὶ αὐτοῦ. Οὐ γὰρ παρῆν ὁ Μάρκος τοῖς ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ λεχθεῖσιν, ἀλλ’ οὐδὲ Πέτρος τὰ πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ περὶ αὐτοῦ λεχθέντα τῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐδιδάσκον δι’ οἰκειᾶς προσφέρειν μαρτυρίας. Τίνα δὲ ἦν τὰ πρὸς αὐτὸν λεχθέντα, Ματθαῖος δηλοῖ διὰ τούτων. “Ὑμεῖς δὲ τίνα με λέγετε εἶναι; Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ Σίμων Πέτρος εἶπεν, σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζῶντος. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῷ. Μακάριος εἶ Σίμων Βαριωνᾶ, ὅτι σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα οὐκ ἀπεκάλυψέ σοι, ἀλλ’ ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ ἐγὼ σοι λέγω. Σὺ εἶ Πέτρος καὶ ἐπὶ ταύτην τὴν πέτραν οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ πύλαι ᾗδου οὐ κατισχύσουσιν αὐτῆς· καὶ δώσω σοι τὰς κλεῖς τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ ὅσα ἂν δήσῃς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἔσται δεδεμένα ἐν ταῖς οὐρανοῖς· καὶ ὅσα ἂν λύσῃς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἔσται λελυμένα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.” Τούτων εἰρημένων τῷ Πέτρῳ ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ὁ Μάρκος μηδὲν τούτων μνημονεύσας, ὅτι μὴδ’ ὁ Πέτρος ταῦθ’, ὡς εἰκόσ, ἐν ταῖς αὐτοῦ διδασκαλίαις ἐξηγόρησεν, ὅρα τί φησιν, ἐρωτήσαντος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. “Ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Πέτρος λέγει, σὺ εἶ ὁ Χριστὸς. Καὶ ἐπετίμησεν αὐτοῖς, ἵνα μηδεὶν λέγωσι περὶ αὐτοῦ.” Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ὁ Πέτρος εἰκότως παρασιωπᾶσθαι ἤξιον· διὸ καὶ Μάρκος αὐτὰ παρέλιπεν· τὰ δὲ κατὰ τὴν ἄνοιαν αὐτοῦ εἰς πάντας ἐκάρυξεν ἀνθρώπους. Ἐπεὶ καὶ ἔκλινεν ἐπ' αὐτῇ πιζῶς. Εὗροις δ' οἷον τὸν Μάρκον ἰστοροῦντα περὶ αὐτοῦ τάδε; “Καὶ ὅντος τοῦ Πέτρου ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ, ἔρχεται πρὸς αὐτὸν μία τῶν παιδισκῶν τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, καὶ ἰδοῦσα αὐτὸν θερμαινόμενον ἐμβλέψασα αὐτῷ λέγει· Καὶ σὺ μετὰ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Ναζαρεῖου ἦς. Ὁ δὲ ἡρῆσατο λέγων· οὔτε ἐπίσταμαι τί σὺ λέγεις· καὶ ἐξῆλθεν εἰς τὸ ἔξω προαύλιον, καὶ ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησεν. Πάλιν δὲ ἰδοῦσα αὐτὸν ἡ παιδίσκη ἤρξατο λέγειν τοῖς παρεσιῶσιν· Οὗτος ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐστιν· Ὁ δὲ πάλιν ἡρῆσατο. Καὶ μετὰ μικρὸν πάλιν παρεσιῶτες ἔλεγον τῷ Πέτρῳ· Ἀληθῶς ἐξ αὐτῶν εἶ, καὶ γὰρ Γαλιλαῖος εἶ. Ὁ δὲ ἤρξατο ἀναθεματίζειν καὶ ὁμνίειν, ὅτι Οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον ταῦτον, ὃν λέγετε· καὶ εὐθέως ἐκ δευτέρου ἀλέκτωρ ἐφώνησεν.” Μάρκος μὲν ταῦτα γράφει. Πέτρος δὲ ταῦτα περὶ ἑαυτοῦ μαρτυρεῖ· πάντα γὰρ τὰ παρὰ Μάρκῳ τῶν Πέτρου διαλέξεων εἶναι λέγεται Ἀπομνημονεύματα. Οἱ δὲ οἷον τὰ μὲν δόξαντα αὐτοῖς ἀγαθὴν φέρειν φήμην παραιτούμενοι, τὰς δὲ καθ' ἑαυτῶν διαβολὰς εἰς ἀληστον αἰῶνα καταγράφοντες, καὶ τῶν πλημμεληθέντων αὐτοῖς τὰς κατηγορίας, ἃς οὐκ ἂν τις ἔγνω τῶν μετὰ ταῦτα, εἰ μὴ διὰ τῆς αὐτῶν ἑμαθεν φωνῆς καθ' ἑαυτῶν στιλιτεύοντες, πῶς οὐ φιλαυτίας μὲν ἀπάσης καὶ ψευδολογίας ἐκτὸς γεγονέναι ἐνδίκως ἂν ὁμολογοῖντο, φιλαλήθους δὲ διαθέσεως σαφὴ καὶ ἐναργὴ τεκμήρια παρεσχημέναι;

Οἱ δέ γε τοὺς τοιοῦσδε πεπλάσθαι καὶ καταψεύσασθαι νομίζοντες, καὶ οἷα πλάνοις βλασφημεῖν πειρώμενοι, πῶς οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο καταγέλαστοι; φίλοι μὲν φθόνον καὶ βασιλείας, ἐχθροὶ δὲ αὐτῆς ἀληθείας ἀλισκόμενοι, οἱ γε τοὺς οὕτως ἀπανούργους καὶ ἄπλαστον ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ ἀκέραιον ἦθος διὰ τῶν οὐκ εὖ λόγων ἐπιδεδειγμένους, πανούργους τινὰς καὶ δεινοὺς ὑποτίθενται σοφιστὰς, ὥς τὰ μὴ ὄντα πλασασμένους καὶ τῷ οὐκ εὖ διδασκάλῳ τὰ μὴ πρὸς αὐτοῦ προχθέντα κεχαρισμένως ἀναθέντας. Ὡς εἶ μοι δοκεῖ εἰρησθαι· πάντα χρὴ πιστεῖν τοῖς τοῦ Ἰησοῦ μαθηταῖς, ἢ μὴ· καὶ εἰ μόνοις τοῖς τοῖς ἀνδράσιν ἀπισιγτέον, καὶ τοῖς πᾶσιν, οὔτινές ποτ' ἔρα παρ' Ἑλλήσιν, ἢ παρὰ βαρβάρους βίους καὶ λόγους καὶ ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν κατὰ χρόνον ἐπὶ τισιν ἀγαθοῖς κατορθώμασι βοηθέντων συνεγράψαντο· ἢ τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις πιστεῖν εὐλογον, μόνοις δὲ τοῖς ἀπιστεῖν. Καὶ πῶς οὐκ ἐμφανὴς ὁ φθόνος; Τί δέ; οἱ καταψευδόμενοι τοῦ διδασκαλοῦ, καὶ τὰ μὴ γεγονότα τῇ αὐτῶν παραδιδόντες γραφῇ, ἄρα καὶ τὰ πάθῃ κατεψείσαντο αὐτοῦ; Τὴν ἐνὸς λέγω μαθητῶν προδοσίαν, καὶ τὴν τῶν συκοφαντῶν κατηγορίαν, χλεύας τε καὶ διασυρμούς δικαστῶν, τὰς τε ὕβρεις καὶ τὰς πληγὰς τὰς κατὰ προσώπον, μάλιστα τε κατὰ νότον, καὶ τὸν ἐξ ἀκανθῶν στέφανον ἐπὶ αἰμιᾷ περιτιθέμενον αὐτῷ, φοιτιζοῦν τε χιτῶνα ἐν γλαμίδος σχήματι περιβληθέντα, καὶ τέλος, αὐτὸν αὐτὸ τὸ τοῦ σταυροῦ τρόλαιον ἐπιζομφίζοντα· ἐν τούτῳ τε πηγνυμένον, καὶ χειρὰς καὶ πόδας καταπειρόμενον, ὅξει τε ποιτιζόμενον, καὶ παιόμενον κατὰ κόρυϊς καλάνυ, καὶ πρὸς τῶν ὀρόντων ὀνειδιζόμενον; Ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ ταῦτα καὶ ὅσα τούτοις συμφέρεται ὁμοίως πελάσθαι χρὴ πρὸς τῶν αὐτοῦ μαθητῶν, ἢ ἐν τούτοις μὲν χρὴ πιστεῦναι αὐτοῖς ὡς ἀληθεστάτοις, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἐπιδόξοις καὶ σεμνοτέροις ἀπιστεῖν. Καὶ πόθεν τὸ περὶ αὐτοὺς ἐναντίον δόγμα σιστίσεται; Τὸ γὰρ ἀληθεύειν τοὺς αὐτοὺς φάναι, καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ ψεύδεσθαι, οὐδὲν ἔστιν ἢ τάναντία κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν λέγειν.

Τίς οὖν ὁ τούτων ἔλεγχος; Εἰ γὰρ δὴ πλάττεσθαι αὐτοῖς σχολὸς ἦν καὶ λόγοις ψευδέσι τὸν διδάσκαλον κοσμεῖν, οὐκ ἂν ποτε αὐτοῖς τὰ προειρημένα κατέγραφον, οὐδ' ἂν ἐδίλκον τοῖς μετὰ ταῦτα ἀνθρώποις, ὅτι δὴ ἐλυπεῖτο, καὶ ἰδημόνει καὶ τειάρακτο τὴν ψυχὴν, ὅτι αὐτοὶ αὐτὸν ἀπολιπόντες ὥχοντο· ἢ ὅτι ὁ πάντων αὐτῶν προκεκριμένος ἀπόστολός τε καὶ μαθητὴς αὐτοῦ Πέτρος βασιάνων ἐκτός καὶ ἀρχονικῆς ἀπειλῆς τρίτον αὐτὸν ἐξωμόσατο. Ταῦτα γὰρ καὶ ἄλλων λεγόντων, χρὴν δίηκινθαι ἀρεῖσθαι τοὺς οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ χαριζέσθαι τὰ σεμνότερα τῷ διδασκάλῳ προτεθειμένους. Εἰ δὲ φιλαλήθεις ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῦ σκεθρωποῖς διηγήμασι φαίνονται, πολὺ μᾶλλον ἐν τοῖς ἐνδοξοτέροις εἶεν ἂν τοιοῦτοι. Τοὺς γὰρ ἅπασι ψεύδεσθαι προελομένους, τὰ λεπτὰ καὶ χρὴν μᾶλλον ἐκφυγεῖν ἢ τοὶ διὰ σιωπῆς, ἢ διὰ τῆς περὶ αὐτῶν ἀρνήσεως, μὴ ἄλλως τῶν ὀψιγόνων ἐλέγξει δυναμένων τὰ σεσιγημένα. Διὰ τί γὰρ μὴ ἐψεύσαντο, καὶ ἔφησαν, ὅτι Ἰούδας μὲν ὁ προδοὺς αὐτὸν φιλήματι, τολμήσας τὸ σύμβολον ἐνδείξασθαι τῆς προδοσίας, ἀπολιθωθείη αὐτίκα· ὁ δὲ ῥαπίσαι αὐτὸν τολμήσας, ξηρὸς παραχρήμα γένοιτο τὴν δεξιάν· ὁ δ' ἀρχιερεὺς Καϊάφας, ὡς ἂν συντρέχων τοῖς κατ' αὐτοῦ συκοφάνταις πηρωθείη τὰς ὕψεις; Διὰ τί δὲ μὴ ἐψεύσαντο πάντες, ὅτι μηδὲν σκεθρωπὸν ἀληθῶς περὶ αὐτὸν γέγονεν; Ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἀφανὴς ἦν καταγελάσας αὐτῶν τοῦ δικαστηρίου· οἱ δὲ ἐπιβουλεύοντες, ἐπὶ φαντασίας θειλάτου πλανώμενοι, ἐνεργεῖν καὶ αὐτοῦ μὴ παρόντος ἐδόκουν; Τί δ'· ἄρα οὐκ ἦν σεμνότερον τοῦ πλάττεσθαι, ὅτι τῶν τοιῶνδε ποιητῆς ἔργων παραδόξων γέγονε, τὸ γράφειν ὅτι μηδὲν μὲν ἀνθρώπινον, μηδὲ θνητὸν περὶ αὐτὸν συνέβη, ἐνθ' ἐφ' οὗ δυνάμει τὰ πάντα καταδυσάμενος, τὴν εἰς οὐρανὸν ἐπάνοδον μετὰ θειοτέρας δόξης ἐποιήσατο; Οὐ γὰρ δὴ τοῦτοις ἀπιστεῖν ἔμελλον οἱ ταῖς ἄλλαις αὐτῶν διηγήσεσι πεπιστευκότες. Οἱ δ' οὖν μηδὲν τῆς ἀληθείας ἐν τοῖς ἀπειρημένοι καὶ σκεθροποῖς παραχαράζοντες πῶς οὐκ ἂν εἶεν ἄξιοι καὶ ἐν τοῖς λοιποῖς, οἷς ἐμαρτύρησαν αὐτῷ τὰ παράδοξα, φαύλης ἐκτὸς ὑπονοίας καθεστάναι;

ἱστορία δὲ κατέχει, ὥς καὶ μεγίστη τις ἦν ἐκκλησία Χριστοῦ ἐν τοῖς Ἱεροσολύμοις, ἀπὸ Ἰουδαίων συγκροτούμενη, μέχρι τῶν χρόνων τῆς κατ' Ἀδριανὸν πολιτείας. Λέγονται γοῦν οἱ πρῶτοι κατὰ διαδοχὴν προσιάντες αὐτόθι ἐπίσκοποι Ἰουδαῖοι γεγονέναι, ὧν καὶ ὀνόματα εἰσέτι νῦν παρὰ τοῖς ἐγγωρίοις μνημονεύεται· ὥς καὶ ἐκ τούτων λελλέσθαι πᾶσαν τὴν κατὰ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ διαβολήν, ὅτε καὶ πρὸς αὐτῶν, καὶ δίχα τῆς αὐτῶν μαρτυρίας, μυσία ὁμολογεῖται πλήθῃ Ἰουδαίων τε καὶ Ἑλλήνων αὐτοὺς Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ δι' ὧν ἐπετέλει παραδόξων ἔργων ἴφ' ἑαυτὸν πεποιημένος. Ἀλλὰ τούτων ἡμῖν ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον εἰρημένων, πρὸς τὸ πρῶτον τῶν ἀπίστων τάγμα, φέρε, καὶ πρὸς τὸ δεῦτερον στίφος ἐνστῶμεν. Τοῦτο δὲ ἦν τὸ τῶν συνομολογούντων μὲν τὸν Ἰησοῦν τὰ παράδοξα πεποιημέναι, γοητεία δὲ ἄλλως ἐπὶ πλάνῃ τῶν ὁρώντων, οἷα θαυματουργὸν ἢ φαρμακέα τινὰ, θαυμαστώσαι τοὺς παρόντας.

Haeres. II. t. 1. h. 51 (contra haeresim quae non suscipit Ev. Joannis et Apocalypsin). Μαθθαῖος γὰρ πρῶτος ἄρχεται εὐαγγελίζεσθαι. Τοῦτω γὰρ ἦν ἐπιτεταγμένον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κηρύξαι ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ὥς καὶ ἐν ἄλλῃ αἰρέσει περὶ τούτου διὰ πλάτους εἰρήκαμεν. Οὐδὲν δὲ ἡμᾶς λυπήσει καὶ αἰτίς περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν διαλαμβάνειν, εἰς παράστασιν τῆς ἀληθείας, καὶ ἔλεγχον τῶν πεπλανημένων. Οὗτος τοίνυν ὁ Μαθθαῖος καταξιούται τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ὥς ἔφην, καὶ δικαιοτάτα ἦν. Ἔδει γὰρ τὸν ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἁμαρτημάτων ἐπιστρέψαντα καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ τελωνείου ἀναστάντα τῷ ἐλθόντι ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ λέγοντι·

<sup>1</sup> Epiphanius was still living and at work in extreme old age when Jerome wrote his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical writers (A.D. 392). He was a native of Palestine, Bishop of Constantia (Salamis) in Cyprus about A.D. 367. Seven or eight years afterwards he began his Panarium, or great work against Heresies. He wrote a book called the Ancorate, and one on weights and measures. He is an interesting but not trustworthy chronicler and is apt to let his fancy run away with him. But he has preserved interesting extracts from some heretical books, and several curious floating traditions regarding the Canonical Scriptures. (See Introduction: 'Gospel of Hebrews,' &c.) He denounced all apocryphal books, the only exception being his respectful references to a book he calls "The Constitution of the Apostles," concerning which see before, at page 25. See full discussion, Lardner, II. 421; Bunsen's Analecta Antienicaena; and Hefele's Hist. of Councils.

Εὐθὺς δὲ μετὰ τὸν Ματθαῖον ἀκόλουθος γενόμενος ὁ Μάρκος τῷ ἁγίῳ Πέτρῳ ἐν Ῥώμῃ, ἐπιτρέπεται τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον ἐκθέσθαι· καὶ γράψας ἀποστέλλεται ἐπὶ τοῦ ἁγίου Πέτρου εἰς τὴν τῶν Αἰγυπτίων χώραν. Οὗτος δὲ εἰς ἐτήγγανεν ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομηκονταδύο τῶν διασκορπισθέντων ἐπὶ τῷ ῥήματι, ὃ εἶπεν ὁ Κύριος· Ἐὰν μὴ τίς μου φάγῃ τὴν σάρκα, καὶ πῖνῃ τὸ αἷμα, οὐκ ἔστι μου ἄξιος· ὥς τοῖς τὰ Εὐαγγέλια ἀναγνοῦσι σαφῆς ἡ παρὰστασις. Ὅμως διὰ Πέτρου ἀνακάμψας εὐαγγελίζεσθαι καταξιοῦται, πνεύματι ἁγίῳ ἐμπεφοριμένος. Ἀρχεται δὲ κηρύττειν, ὅθεν τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτῷ παρεκελεύσατο, τὴν ἀρχὴν τάττων ἀπὸ πεντεκαιδεκάτου ἔτους Τιβερίου Καίσαρος, μετὰ ἑτὶ τριάκοντα τῆς τοῦ Ματθαίου πραγματείας. Δευτέρου δὲ γενομένου εὐαγγελιστοῦ, καὶ μὴ περὶ τῆς ἁνωθεν καταγωγῆς Θεοῦ Λόγου τηλαυγῶς σημάναντος· ἀλλὰ πάντῃ μὲν ἐμφαντικῶς, οὐ μὴν κατὰ ἀκριβολογίαν τοσαύτην, γέγονε τοῖς προειρημένοις, εἰς δεύτερον σκότισιν τῶν διανοημάτων, τοῦ μὴ καταξιοθῆναι πρὸς φωτισμὸν τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου, λεγόντων αὐτῶν, ὅτι Ἰδοὺ δεύτερον Εὐαγγέλιον περὶ Χριστοῦ σημαίνον, καὶ οὐδαμοῦ ἁνωθεν λέγων τὴν γέννησιν· ἀλλὰ φησιν· Ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ κατήλθε τὸ πνεῦμα ἐπ' αὐτόν, καὶ φωνή· Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς ὁ ἀγαπητός, ἐφ' ὃν ἠδδόκησα. Comment. in Mat. prooem. (T. IV. p. 2). Plures fuisse, qui Evangelia scripserunt, et Lucas Evangelista testatur, dicens: "Quoniam quidem multi conati sunt ordinare narrationem rerum, quae in nobis completæ sunt, sicut tradiderunt nobis, qui ab initio ipsi viderunt Sermonem, et ministraverunt ei;" et perseverantia usque ad praesens tempus monimenta declarant: quae a diversis auctoribus edita, diversarum haereseon fuere principia, ut est illud juxta Ægyptios<sup>2</sup> et Thomam,<sup>3</sup> et Matthiam<sup>4</sup> et Bartholomaeum,<sup>5</sup> duodecim quoque apostolorum,<sup>6</sup> et Basilidis<sup>7</sup> atque Apellis,<sup>8</sup> ac reliquorum,<sup>9</sup> quos enumerare longissimum est: cum tantum in praesentiarum hoc necesse sit dicere: exstitisse quosdam, qui sine spiritu et gratia Dei conati sunt magis ordinare narrationem, quam historiae texere veritatem. Quibus jure potest illud propheticum coaptari: "Vae qui prophetant de corde suo: qui ambulant post spiritum suum, qui dicunt: Haec dicit Dominus: et Dominus non misit eos." De quibus et Salvator in Evangelio Joannis loquitur: "Omnes qui ante me venerunt, fures et latrones fuerunt." Qui venerunt, non qui missi sunt. Ipse enim ait: "Veniebant, et ego non mittebam eos." In venientibus, praesumptio temeritatis: in missis, obsequium servitutis est. Ecclesia autem, quae supra petram Domini voce fundata est, quam introduxit rex in cubiculum suum, et ad quam per foramen descensionis occultae misit manum suam, similis damulae hinnuloque cervorum, quatuor flumina paradisi instar eructans, quatuor angulos et annulos habet, per quos quasi arca Testamenti et custos Legis Domini, lignis immobilibus vehitur. mus omnium est Matthaeus publicanus, cognomento Levi, qui Evangelium in Judaea Hebraeo sermone edidit, ob eorum vel maxime causam, qui in Jesum crediderant ex Judaeis, et nequaquam Legis umbram, succedente Evangelii veritate, servabant. Secundus Marcus, interpret apostoli Petri, et Alexandrinae ecclesiae primus episcopus, qui Dominum quidem Salvatorem ipse non vidit, sed ea, quae magistrum audierat praedicantem, juxta fidem magis gestorum narravit, quam ordinem.<sup>10</sup> Tertius Lucas medicus, natione Syrus Antiochensis (cujus laus in evangelio) qui et ipse discipulus apostoli Pauli, in Achaiae, Boeotiaeque partibus volumen condidit, quaedam altius repetens, et ut ipse in prooemio confitetur, audita magis quam visa describens. Ultimus Joannes apostolus et evangelista, quem Jesus amavit plurimum, qui supra pectus Domini recumbens, purissima doctrinarum fluentia potavit, et qui solus de cruce meruit audire: "Ecce mater tua." Is cum esset in Asia, et jam tunc haereticorum semina pullularent, Cerinthi, Ebionis, et ceterorum qui negant Christum in carne venisse (quos et ipse in epistola sua Antichristos vocat, et apostolus Paulus frequenter percutit) coactus est ab omnibus pene tunc Asiae episcopis et multarum ecclesiarum legationibus, de divinitate Salvatoris altius scribere, et ad ipsum (ut ita dicam) Dei Verbum, non tam audaci, quam felici temeritate prorumpere. Unde et ecclesiastica narrat historia, cum a fratribus cogeretur ut scriberet, ita facturum se respondisse, si indicto jejunio in commune omnes Deum deprecarentur: quo expleto, revelatione saturatus, in illud prooemium e coelo veniens eructavit: "In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum; hoc erat in principio apud Deum." Haec igitur quatuor Evangelia multo ante praedicta, Ezechielis quoque volumen probat, in quo prima Visio ita contextitur: "Et in medio sicut similitudo quatuor animalium: et vultus eorum facies hominis, et facies leonis, et facies vituli, et facies aquilae." Prima hominis facies Matthaeum significat, qui quasi de homine exorsus est scribere: "Liber generationis Jesu Christi, filii David, filii Abraham." Secunda Marcum, in quo vox leonis in eremo rugientis auditur: "Vox clamantis in deserto, parate viam Domini, rectas facite semitas ejus." Tertia vituli, quae evangelistam Lucam a Zacharia sacerdote sumpsisse initium praefigurat. Quarta Joannem evangelistam, qui assumptis pennis aquilae, et ad altiora festinans, de verbo Dei disputat. Caetera quae sequuntur, in eundem sensum proficiunt. Crura eorum recta, et pennati pedes, et quocunque ibat spiritus, ibant, et non re-vertebantur: et dorsa eorum plena oculis, et scintillae ac lampades in medio discurrentes, et rota in rota, et in singulis quatuor facies. Unde et Apocalypsis Joannis, post expositionem viginta quatuor seniorum, qui tenentes citharas ac phialas, adorant Agnum Dei, introducit fulgura, et tonitrua, et septem spiritus discurrentes, et mare vitreum, et quatuor animalia plena oculis, dicens: "Animal primum simile leoni: et secundum simile vitulo: et tertium simile homini: et quartum simile aquilae volanti." Et post paululum: "Plena erant," inquit, "oculis, et requiem non habebant die ac nocte, dicentia: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus omnipotens, qui erat, et qui est, et qui venturus est."

Praefatio in IV. Evang. ad Damas. Igitur haec praesens praefatiuncula pollicetur, quatuor tantum Evangelia, quorum ordo est iste: Matthaeus, Marcus, Lucas et Joannes, codicum Graecorum emendata collatione, sed et veterum: nec quae multum a lectionis Latinae consuetudine discreparent.

THE APOSTOLICAL FATHERS AND THE SYNOPTISTS.

C. 4. 3. Τὸ τέλειον σκάνδαλον ἤγγικε, περὶ οὗ γέγραπται, ὡς Ἐnoch λέγει, εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ὁ δεσπότης συντέτυγκε τοὺς καιροὺς καὶ ἰὰς ἡμέρας, ἵνα ταχύνῃ ὁ ἡγαπημένος αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν κληρονομίαν ἡξῇ.<sup>2</sup> (Compare Mat. xxiv. 6, 22; Mark xiii. 7.)

C. 4. 14. Ἔτι δὲ κάκεινο, ἀδελφοί μου, νοεῖτε· ὅταν βλέπητε μετὰ τηλικαῦτα σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα τὰ γεγονότα ἐν τῇ Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ οὕτως ἐγκαταλελειφθαι αὐτοὺς, προσέχουμεν μίποτε, ὡς γέγραπται, πολλοὶ κλητοὶ, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἐκλεκτοὶ εὗρεθῶμεν.<sup>3</sup> (Mat. (xx. 16?); xxii. 14).

C. 5. 9. Ὅτε δὲ τοὺς ἰδίους ἀποστόλους τοὺς μέλλοντας κηρύσσειν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον αὐτοῦ ἐξελέξατο, ὅντας ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν ἀμαρτίαν ἀνομιωτέρους, ἵνα δείξῃ ὅτι οὐκ ἤλθεν καλέσαι δι-

<sup>2</sup> The Latin reads "Sicut Daniel dicit." The words are not in Enoch as we have it. Hilg. refers (but the reference is forced) to "Enoch lxxxix. 61, &c., xc. 17;" see also Sup. Rel. I. 237. For συντέτυγκεν compare Dan. ix. 24. We cannot find more than correspondence of idea between the passage and the Synoptists. Even if the passage be suggested by Enoch, it is doubtful whether the εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ κ.τ.λ. belong to it. Hilg. points λέγει. (so as to stop the reference).

<sup>3</sup> This passage is preceded by a warning against sleeping in sin lest the wicked potentate should have power to exclude us from the kingdom of the Lord. There is a possible allusion to Mat. xxv. 5, &c., but not so clear as to induce us to quote. In our text the phrase ὡς γέγραπται is remarkable, as the first quotation from our Lord's words with similar reference to the written record. His words are often quoted, but not as from Scripture. To deny, as some do, that these words are from Matthew's Gospel which we have in our hands, and to ascribe them to the lost Greek of 4 Ezra viii. 3 (of which the Latin is Nam multi creati sunt, pauci autem salvabuntur), is surely an extraordinary proceeding. The same word γέγραπται occurs in the previously quoted passage, c. 4, 3; but whether or how far in reference to Enoch is really doubtful. But the fact that it does occur may make us hesitate to found more upon it here than that it proves Barnabas to be quoting from Matthew as a written record of our Lord's sayings.

C. 7. 11. Οὕτω, φησὶν, οἱ θέλοντές με ἰδεῖν, καὶ ἄψασθαι μου τῆς βασιλείας, ὁφείλουσι θλιβέντες καὶ παθόντες λαβεῖν με.<sup>6</sup> (Compare Mat. xvi. 24.)

C. 12. 11. Ἐπεὶ οὖν μέλλουσι λέγειν ὅτι Χριστὸς υἱὸς Δαυὶδ ἔστιν, αὐτὸς προφητεῖει Δαυὶδ, φοβούμενος καὶ σκηνῶν τὴν πλάνην τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν· Εἶπεν Κύριος τῷ Κυρίῳ μου· Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν σου. Καὶ πάλιν λέγει οὕτως Ἡσαΐας· Εἶπε Κύριος τῷ Χριστῷ μου Κυρίῳ, οὗ ἐκράτησα τῆς δεξιᾶς αὐτοῦ ἐλακοῦσαι ἐμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ ἔθνη, καὶ ἰσχυρὴν βασιλείαν διαρρήξω. Ἴδε πῶς Δαυὶδ λέγει αὐτὸν Κύριον καὶ υἱὸν οὗ λέγει.<sup>7</sup> (Compare Mat. xxii. 45.)

C. 15. 8. Πέρας γέ τοι λέγει αὐτοῖς· Τὰς νεομηνίας ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ σάββατα οὐκ ἀνέχομαι. Ὅρῳτε πῶς λέγει· Οὐ τὰ νῦν σάββατα ἔμοι δεκτὰ, ἀλλὰ ὁ πεποίημα, ἐν ᾧ καταπαύσας τὰ

<sup>4</sup> Cod. 8 and I (Bryennios) and old Latin agree in the reading. The common text added εἰς μετάνοιαν after ἁμαρτωλοὺς. This same quotation appears 2 Clem. c. 2. 4, with the preface ἐτέρᾳ δὲ γραφῇ λέγει ὅτι. See also Justin, Apol. I. c. 15, where we have it with the addition of εἰς μετάνοιαν and the preface εἶπε δὲ οὕτως. Origen cont. Cels. I. 63 defends the character of the Apostles against the charges which Celsus had advanced, founding probably, as Origen thinks, on this expression "in the Catholic Epistle of Barnabas." Christ's saying may have been preserved in some "original Spruch-Sammlung," or in "many other works" as some say—it is impossible to disprove such hypotheses—but as a matter of fact we have it in St. Matthew.

<sup>7</sup> This passage is a reference to the O. T. Although it cannot be pressed as coming through the canonical Gospel, the short comment of Barnabas upon it naturally suggests that he took his interpretation of the Psalm from our Lord's words in St. Matthew. The readings in the whole passage vary. It is usually printed καὶ υἱὸν Θεοῦ. But 8 and Bryennios's MS, with the Latin, support the text as above.

πάντα ἀρχὴν ἡμέρας ὁγδόης ποιήσω, ὃ ἐστὶν ἄλλον κόσμον ἀρχή. Αὐὸ καὶ ἄγομεν τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ὁγδὼν εἰς εὐφροσύνην, ἐν ᾗ καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἀνέστη ἐκ νεκρῶν καὶ φανερωθεὶς ἀνέβη εἰς οὐρανοῦς.<sup>8</sup> (Compare Mark xvi. 14, &c.; Luke xxiv. 51; and on the other hand Mat. xxviii. 10; Acts i. 3.)

C. 19. 11. Παντὶ [τῷ] αἰτοῦντί σε δίδου." (Compare Mat. v. 42; Luke vi. 30.)

First Epistle.

C. 13.<sup>1</sup> Ταπεινοφρονήσωμεν οὖν, ἀδελφοί, ἀποθέμενοι πᾶσαν ἀλαζονείαν καὶ τῖφον καὶ ἄφροσύνην καὶ ὀργὰς καὶ ποιήσωμεν τὸ γεγραμμένον—λέγει γὰρ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον (Jer. ix. 23). Μὴ καιχάσθω ὁ σοφὸς ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ αὐτοῦ μηδὲ ὁ ἰσχυρὸς ἐν τῇ

<sup>8</sup> This passage is cited here because it has been used by Hilgenfeld (Barnabas, p. 118) and Reuss (Gesch. § 234) to show that 'Barnabas' was written in the first century, before the exclusive authority of "our Gospels" was established. It appears to contradict them all (says Reuss) save the third. But in that case Acts contradicts Luke, and the truth is that to group the Resurrection and Ascension together is quite consistent with fuller accounts which detail miraculous appearances between. Besides there is indefinite time in φανερωθεὶς.

<sup>9</sup> These words are in the common Greek Text and in the Sinaitic corrector's text (seventh century), following the words Οὐ διατάσεις δοῦναι, οὐδὲ διδοὺς γογγύσεις. They are omitted in 8 primā manu and in I (Bryennios's MS). The Old Latin wants chapters 18-21, so that we cannot appeal to it. Gebhardt omits the words, now also Hilg. (1877).

<sup>1</sup> This passage begins with Jeremiah and ends with Isaiah, the first quotation being in words suggested by 1 Cor. i. 31 (2 Cor. x. 17, see also 1 Kings ii. 10); and its main passage is an abridgment or echo of passages from the Sermon on the Mount. There is no doubt that the only difficulty in believing that Clement consciously abridged Matthew or Luke lies in the "unusual length and roundness and compactness" of the passage. But if we allow that he was writing from memory (which is possible), and if he was accumulating precepts to enjoin lowly-mindedness because of the retribution which awaits harsh judgments and self-righteousness (which is certain), this difficulty is in great measure removed. It is worth while to compare Polycarp's form of quotation of the same passage (see below page 112) and Justin's χρῆστοι καὶ οὐκ ἐπίρμενοι Apol. I. 15; Dial. 96. Those who will have Clement to be quoting some "well-known record" (which is not our Canonical Gospels), and who will have it to be "careful and precise quotation of the very words," need to have another well-known source for Polycarp, and at least two others for Justin, who (as usual) is not verbally consistent with himself. They have to meet also the fact that those "very words" are not found in any extant Gospel. The clause χρῆστεύεσθε κ.τ.λ. is not in our Gospels, though it suggests Justin's words. The order of the clauses varies in the MSS, ὃ μέτρω μετρεῖτε κ.τ.λ. being in Bryennios's MS put before the two precepts which immediately precede it in our text.

 οὐκ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ ἕνα τῶν ἐκκληκτῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι· κρεῖττον ἦν αὐτῷ περιτεθῆναι μύλον, καὶ καταποντισθῆναι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, ἢ ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι.<sup>3</sup> (Compare Mat. xxvi. 24, xviii. 6; Mark ix. 42;

 member the original, and what he quotes is the peculiar form in Mark vii. 6.
 The text of the LXX is ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐν τοῖς χεῖλεσιν αὐτῶν τιμᾷσίν με. (See this more nearly reproduced in Mat. xv. 8.)
 The form of Clement is exactly that of Mark, save that he has ἄπεστιν for ἀπέ-χει. See the similar quotation of Jeremiah through St Paul in 1 Clem. c. 13 (quoted above). See also the almost identical form in 2 Clem. c. 3, the only change being ὁ λαὸς οὗτος.

<sup>3</sup> On the whole this passage does not give grounds for asserting that its author used our canonical Gospels; but it is not inconsistent with the supposition that he did. His variations from them all are not greater than those of Mark and Luke from each other. Compare Clem. Alex. Strom. III. 18. p. 561:
 Οὐαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ, φησὶν ὁ Κύριος, καλὸν ἦν αὐτῷ εἰ μὴ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ ἕνα τῶν ἐκκληκτῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι (Mat. xxvi. 24), κρεῖττον ἦν αὐτῷ περιτεθῆναι μύλον καὶ καταποντισθῆναι εἰς θάλασσαν ἢ ἕνα τῶν ἐκκληκτῶν μου διαστρέψαι (Mat. xviii. 6). And Hom. XII. 29 Ὁ τῆς ἀληθείας προφήτης ἔφη· τὰ ἀγαθὰ ἐλθεῖν δεῖ, μακάριος δὲ, φησὶν, δεῖ οὐ ἔρχεται. Ὁμοίως καὶ τὰ κατὰ ἀνάγκη

καὶ ἐρῶ ὑμῖν· Ὑπάγετε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, οὐκ οἶδα ὑμᾶς πόθεν ἐστε,

C. 5. 2-4. Μὴ φοβηθῶμεν ἐξελεθεῖν ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου τούτου.
Λέγει γὰρ ὁ Κύριος· Ἔσεσθε ὡς ἁρνία ἐν μέσῳ λύκων. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος αὐτῷ λέγει· Ἐὰν οὖν διασπαράξωσιν οἱ λίἁρνία τοὺς λύκους μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν αὐτά· καὶ ὑμεῖς μὴ φοβεῖσθε τοὺς ἀποκτένοντας ὑμᾶς καὶ μηδὲν ὑμῖν δυναμένους ποιεῖν, ἀλλὰ φοβεῖσθε τὸν μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν ὑμᾶς ἔχοντα ἔξουσίαν ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος τοῦ βαλεῖν εἰς γέενναν πυρός.<sup>7</sup> (Compare Luke

x. 3; Mat. x. 16; Luke xii. 4; Mat. x. 28.)

C. 8. 5. Λέγει γὰρ ὁ Κύριος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ· Εἰ τὸ μικρόν οὐκ ἐτηρήσατε, τὸ μέγα τίς ὑμῖν δώσει; λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν ὅτι ὁ πιστὸς ἐν ἐλαχίστῳ καὶ ἐν πολλῷ πιστὸς ἐστίν. Ἄρα οὖν τοῦτο λέγει· τηρήσατε τὴν σάρκα ἀγνὴν καὶ τὴν σφραγίδα ἄσπι-λον, ἵνα τὴν αἰώνιον ζωὴν ἀπολάβωμεν.<sup>8</sup> (Compare Luke xvi. 10; Mat. xxv. 21.)

τινα ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ΐείας γραφῆς ξενίζοντα παρεισάγει, ὧν οὐδ' ἡ πρώτη ἀπὸ λακτο παντελῶς. It is usually supposed that this is from the Gospel of the Egyptians. See below, quotation from c. 12, and Introduction.

<sup>7</sup> The Synoptic passages to which reference is made give the substance and many of the phrases of this quotation; but the narrative portion indicates another source. The 'Gospel of the Egyptians' is again conjectured. See Clem. Hom.
XVII. 5 and Just. Apol. I. c. 19 for similar passages, but with the usual variations.
Both for example have μὴ δυνάμενος τι ποιῆσαι; Justin has (like Clement) μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν and (like Luke) has not πυρός after γέενναν which the Homily has; while the Hom. has τῇ δὲ ψυχῇ μὴ δυνάμενον τι ποιῆσαι which reminds us of Matthew's τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν μὴ δυνάμενων ἀποκτεῖναι. So far as those variations go they are not greater than those between the Synoptists; but the narrative is irreconcilable with the idea that the passage comes from a Canonical source.

C. 12. 2. Ἐπερωτηθεὶς γὰρ αὐτὸς ὁ Κύριος ἐπὶ τινας πότε ἤξει αὐτοῦ ἡ βασιλεία,<sup>9</sup> εἶπεν· Ὅταν ἔσται τὰ δύο ἓν, καὶ τὸ ἔξω ὡς τὸ ἔσω, καὶ τὸ ἄρσεν μετὰ τῆς θηλείας, ὅτε ἄρσεν ὅτε θήλυ.<sup>10</sup>

3. HERMAS.<sup>1</sup>

Vis. II. 2. 8. Μακάριοι ἡμεῖς ὅσοι οὐκ ἀρνήσονται τὴν ζωὴν αὐτῶν. Ὁμοσεν γὰρ Κύριος κατὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ τοὺς ἀρνησαμένους τὸν Κύριον αὐτῶν ἀπεγνωρίσθαι ἀπὸ τῆς ζωῆς αὐτῶν, τοὺς τῶν μέλλοντας ἀρνεῖσθαι ταῖς ἐρχομέναις ἡμέραις· τοῖς δὲ προτέρων ἀρνησαμένοις, διὰ τὴν πολισπλαγχτίαν ἔλεως ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς.<sup>2</sup> (Mat. x. 32. 33 and xxiv. 21.)

Vis. III. 6. 5. Οὗτοί εἰσιν ἔχοντες μὲν πίστιν, ἔχοντες δὲ καὶ πλοῦτον τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου. Ὅταν γένηται θλίψις, διὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτῶν καὶ διὰ τὰς πραγματείας ἀπαρνοῦνται τὸν Κύριον αὐτῶν. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς αὐτῇ λέγει· Κυρία, πότε οὖν εἴληχθῃς ἔσονται εἰς τὴν οἰκοδομήν; Ὅταν, φησὶν, περιζοπῇ αὐτῶν ὁ πλοῦτος γίς = Baptism. See Hermas, Sim. VIII. 6. But Eus. H. E. VI. 43, makes it = confirmation by the Bishop. This is recorded in connection with Novatus about the middle of the third century.

<sup>9</sup> Clem. Alex. Strom. III. 13. p. 553 says that the inquiry was by Salome πότε γνωστήσεται τὰ περὶ ὧν ἤρετο, and that the Lord said: Ὅταν οὖν τὸ τῆς αἰσχύνης ἔνδυμα πατήσῃ, καὶ ὅταν γένηται τὰ δύο ἓν, καὶ τὸ ἄρσεν μετὰ τῆς θηλείας ὅτε ἄρσεν ὅτε θήλυ. He says that the words are from the 'Gospel of the Egyptians.' Here, as elsewhere, the want of verbal correspondence between the two quotations of (presumably) the same passage is to be noted.

<sup>10</sup> The author quotes (c. 11. 2) an unknown passage as ὁ προφητικὸς λόγος· Ταλαίπωροί εἰσιν οἱ δίψυχοι κ.τ.λ. In 1 Clem. 23. 3 there is the same passage Ταλαίπωροι κ.τ.λ. introduced by the words ἡ γραφὴ αὕτη; but the usual Patristic inaccuracy of citation is apparent on comparing the two forms of what is notwithstanding the same passage. Not only is there διστάζοντες τῇ ψυχῇ in one case and διστάζοντες τῇ καρδίᾳ in the other, and other similar minor variations; but in 1 Clem. the words of an important clause are ἰδοὺ γεγηράκαμεν καὶ οὐδὲν τούτων συμβέβηκεν, while in 2 Clem. the clause runs ἡμεῖς δὲ ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας προσδεχόμενοι οὐδὲν τούτων ἐωράκαμεν. See in the extracts from Justin, and Introduction ('Justin' and 'Clement') further proofs of this habitual looseness of citation, and its bearing on the assumption so often made that when two forms of citation of a Gospel occur in some ancient Christian writing they cannot both be from a Canonical source. See how our author (c. 13. 2) with λέγει γὰρ ὁ Κύριος introduces a citation of Isaiah lii. 5, and goes on to give some pointed clauses which are not in our Scripture.

Vis. III. 9. 7. Νῦν οὖν ὑμῖν λέγω τοῖς προηγουμένοις τῆς ἐκκλησίας καὶ τοῖς πρωτοκαθεδρίταις· μὴ γίνεσθε ὅμοιοι τοῖς φαρμακοῖς. (Mat. xxiii. 6, but see afterwards under 'Hebrews' for the bearing of this passage.) Compare Mand. XI. 12.

Mand. IV. 1. 6. Τί οὖν, φημὶ, Κύριε, ποιήσῃ ὁ ἀνὴρ, ἐὰν ἐπιμείνηται τῷ πάθει τούτῳ ἢ γυνή; Ἀπολυσάτω, φησὶν, αὐτὴν, καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ μενέτω· ἐὰν δὲ ἀπολύσας τὴν γυναῖκα ἐτέραν γαμήσῃ, καὶ αὐτὸς μοιχᾶται.<sup>4</sup> (Mat. v. 32; Luke xvi. 18; 1 Cor. vii. 11.)

<sup>3</sup> This is the passage quoted by Irenaeus IV. 20. 2. with such approval: καλῶς οὖν εἶπεν ἡ γραφὴ ἢ λέγουσα· πρῶτον πάντων πιστευσον κ.τ.λ. See Eus. H. E. V. 8, where speaking of Irenaeus he says: Οὐ μόνον δὲ οἶδεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀποδέχεται, τὴν τοῦ ποιμένου γραφὴν, λέγων κ.τ.λ. It may refer to 1 Cor. i. 28.

<sup>4</sup> The sin referred to is that of a Christian husband whose (Christian) wife is guilty of adultery. He is to receive her back if she repents, and not to marry again lest he take away from her the occasion of repentance. This is to hold good for one occasion.

4. IGNATIUS.<sup>1</sup>

Eph. c. 5. 2. Εἰ γὰρ ἐνὸς καὶ δευτέρου προσευχὴ τοσαύτην ἰσχὺν

<sup>5</sup> The long passage Sim. v. 2 contains a parable of a lord of a vineyard who intrusted it to a faithful servant to fence it round. The servant also however cleared it of weeds and dug it. The lord when he returned not only gave him his freedom (which he had promised if he kept his trust), but made him heir along with his son (συγκληρονόμον τῷ υἱῷ μου). The lord in his gladness next gave many robes to this honoured servant, and he, in turn, of his own freewill shared them with the other servants, which the lord told with joy to his son and his friends. The explanation is given in § 3, and is that if we do anything in addition to the command of the Lord we shall have additional honour. From this the author goes on to urge distribution of superfluous wealth among the poor and needy (James i. 27). The passage may be an echo of Mat. xxiv. 45, and of John xv., but it is impossible to found upon it. There is a beautiful passage, Sim. v. 6, 1, 2: "Ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἀμπελῶνα ἐφύτευσε τοῦτ' ἐστὶ τὸν λαὸν ἐκτίσας καὶ παρέδωκε τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ· καὶ ὁ υἱὸς κατέστησε τοὺς ἀγγέλους ἐπ' αὐτούς τοῦ συντηρεῖν αὐτούς· καὶ αὐτὸς τὰς ἀμαρτίας αὐτῶν ἐκαστὰς πολλὰ κοπιάσας καὶ πολλοὺς κόπους ἠντληχώς· οὐδεὶς γὰρ [ἀμπελῶν] δύναται σκαφῆναι ἄτερ κόπου ἢ μόχθου. In the course of the Similitudes are many passages reminding us of the Gospels, and that is all we can say of them.

5. POLYCARP.

Ep. to Philipp. c. 2. 3. Μνημονεύοντες δὲ ὧν εἶπεν ὁ Κύριος διδάσκων· μὴ κρίνετε, ἵνα μὴ κριθῆτε; ἀφίετε καὶ ἀφεθήσεται ὑμῖν· ἐλεεῖτε, ἵνα ἐλεηθῆτε. [ἐν] ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, ἀντιμετρήσεται ὑμῖν. Καὶ, ὅτι μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοὶ, καὶ οἱ διωζόμενοι ἔνεκεν δικαιοσύνης· ὅτι αὐτῶν ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ.<sup>1</sup> (Mat. v. 3, 7, 10; vii. 1, 2; Luke vi. 20, 36, 37, 38.)

C. 6. 1. Μὴ ἀπότομοι ἐν κρίσει, εἰδότες ὅτι πάντες ὀφειλέται ἐσμὲν ἀμαρτίας. Εἰ οὖν δεόμεθα τοῦ Κυρίου, ἵνα ἡμῖν ἀρῇ, ὀφείλομεν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀριεῖναι. (Compare Mat. vi. 12—14.)

C. 12. 3. Pro omnibus sanctis orate. Orate etiam pro regibus et potestatibus et principibus, atque pro persequentibus et odientibus vos, et pro inimicis crucis, ut fructus vester manifestus sit in omnibus, ut sitis in illo perfecti. (Compare Mat. v. 44, 48; 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2.)

Hebrews.' They are not very unlike what we have in our Gospels, and the form in the 'Gospel of the Hebrews' seems to have been remembered mainly because of the peculiar phrase δαιμόνιον σώματος, on the metaphysical meaning of which Origen enlarges. (See Hilg. N. T. Extra Can. Rec. Fasc. IV. pp. 29, 62; and below, 'Gospel of the Hebrews.')

C. 7. 1. Ἐχόντες οὖν τὸ παιδάριον, τῇ παρασκευῇ περὶ δείπνου ὥραν ἐξήλθον διωγμῆται καὶ ἱππεῖς μετὰ τῶν συνήθων αὐτοῖς ὄντων, ὡς ἐπὶ ληστῶν τρέχοντες. (Mat. xxvi. 55. Compare John xix. 14 for παρασκευή.)

C. 14. 1. Ὁ δὲ [Πολύκαρπος] ὀπίσω τὰς χεῖρας ποιήσας καὶ προσδεθείς, ὥσπερ κριὸς ἐπίσιμος ἐκ μεγάλου ποιμνίου εἰς προσφορὰν, ὁλοκαύτωμα δεξιὸν τῷ Θεῷ ἡτοιμασμένον, ἀναβλέψας εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν εἶπε· “Κύριε ὁ Θεός, ὁ παντοκράτωρ, ὁ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ καὶ ἐλδογητοῦ παιδὸς σου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (Mat. iii. 17; xii. 18; Acts iii. 14; iv. 27, 30) πατὴρ, δι’ οὗ τὴν περὶ σου ἐπίγνωσιν εἰλήγαμεν, ὁ Θεὸς ἀγγέλων καὶ δυνάμεων καὶ πάσης κτίσεως παντός τε τοῦ γένους τῶν δικαίων, οἱ ζῶσιν ἐνώπιόν σου· ἐλόγῳ σε, ὅτι ἡξιώσας με τῆς ἡμέρας καὶ ὥρας ταύτης, τοῦ λαβεῖν μέρος ἐν ἀριθμῷ τῶν μαρτύρων ἐν τῇ ποτηρίῳ (Mat. xx. 22) τοῦ Χριστοῦ σου εἰς ἀνάστασιν ζωῆς (John v. 29) αἰωνίου ψυχῆς τε καὶ σώματος ἐν ἀσθαρσίᾳ πνεύματος ἁγίου· ἐν οἷς προσδεχθεῖν ἐνώπιόν σου σήμερον ἐν θυσίᾳ πίονι καὶ προσδεξιῇ, καθὼς προητοίμασας καὶ προεφάνερωσας καὶ ἐπλήρωσας, ὁ ἀψευδὴς καὶ ἀληθινὸς Θεός.” (John xvii. 3.)

ἐαυτοὺς διὰ τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν· ἄλλῃ οὐ πάντες τοῦτο χωροῦσιν. (Mat. v. 32; xix. 11, 12.)

Apol. I. c. 15. p. 62 C. Οὐ γὰρ τοὺς δικαίους οὐδὲ τοὺς σώ-ζοντας εἰς μετένοιαν ἐκάλεσεν ὁ Χριστὸς, ἀλλὰ τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς καὶ ἀνομώτους καὶ ἀδίκους. Εἴλε δὲ οὕτως· Οὐκ ἤλθον καλέσαι δικαίους ἀλλὰ ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς μετένοιαν.<sup>2</sup> (Mat. ix. 13; Luke
v. 32.) Θέλει γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ ὁ οὐράνιος τὴν μετένοιαν τοῦ ἁμαρτωλοῦ ἢ τὴν κόλασιν αὐτοῦ.

Apol. I. c. 15. p. 62 C.<sup>3</sup> Περὶ δὲ τοῦ στέργειν ἅπαντας ταῦτα ἐδίδαξεν· Εἰ ἀγαπᾷτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, τί καινὸν ποιεῖτε; καὶ γὰρ οἱ πόρνοι τοῦτο ποιοῦσιν. Ἐγὼ δὲ ὑμῖν λέγω· (Mat. v.
44; Luke vi. 28.) Ἐῤῥεσθε ἐπὶ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ὑμῶν καὶ ἀγαπᾷτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς καὶ ἐνλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρασμένους ὑμῖν καὶ εῤῥεσθε ἐπὶ τῶν ἐπηρεάζοντων ὑμᾶς. Εἰς δὲ τὸ κοινοῦ εἶναι τοῖς δεομένοις καὶ μηδὲν πρὸς δόξαν ποιεῖν ταῦτα ἔφη· (Mat. v. 42; Luke vi. 34.) Παντὶ τῷ αἰτοῦντι δίδοιτε καὶ τὸν βουλόμενον δαρεῖσασθαι μὴ ἀποσιναῆτε. Εἰ γὰρ δανεῖζετε παρ' ὧν ἐλπίζετε λαβεῖν, τί καινὸν ποιεῖτε; τοῦτο καὶ οἱ ιεθῶνα ποιοῦσιν. Ὑμεῖς δὲ μὴ θησαυρίζετε ἑαυτοῖς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ὅπου σῆς καὶ βρῶσις ἀφανίζει καὶ ληστὰὶ διορύσσουσι· θησαυρίζετε δὲ ἑαυτοῖς ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ὅπου οὐτε σῆς οὐτε βρῶσις ἀφανίζει. Τί γὰρ ὠφελεία ἀνθρώπου, ἂν τὸν κόσμον ὅλον κερδίῃ, τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἀπολέσῃ; Ἡ τί δώσει αὐτῆς ἀντάλλαγμα; (Mat. vi. 19; xvi. 26; Luke ix. 25.) Θησαυρίζετε οὖν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ὅπου οὐτε σῆς οὐτε βρῶσις ἀφανίζει. Καί· Γίνεσθε δὲ χρηστοὶ καὶ οἰκτιρμονες (Luke vi. 35; Mat. v. 45), ὥς καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν χρηστός ἐστι καὶ οἰκτιρμων, καὶ τὸν ἥλιον αὐτοῦ ἀναιέλλει ἐπὶ ἁμαρτωλοὺς καὶ δικαίους καὶ πονηροὺς.<sup>4</sup> Μὴ μεριμνᾷτε δὲ τί φάγητε ἢ τί ἐνδύσῃθε. (Mat. vi. 25, 31-33.) Οὐχ ὑμεῖς τῶν πετεινῶν καὶ τῶν

Θιρίων διαφέρετε; καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τρέφει αὐτά. Μὴ οὖν μεριμνήσητε τί φάγητε ἢ τί ἐνδύσθητε· οἶδε γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος ὅτι τοῦτων χρεῖαν ἔχετε. Ζητεῖτε δὲ τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ ταῦτα πάντα προσιεθήσεται ὑμῖν. Ὅπου γὰρ ὁ Θεσσαυρός ἐστιν, ἐκεῖ καὶ ὁ νοῦς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου (compare Luke xii. 22-24, 34). Καί· Μὴ ποιῆτε ταῦτα πρὸς τὸ θεαθῆναι ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων· εἰ δὲ μὴ γε, μισθὸν οὐκ ἔχετε παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν τοῦ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. (Mat. vi. 1.)

Apol. I. c. 16. p. 63 B. Περὶ δὲ τοῦ ἀνεξικάκους εἶναι καὶ ἐπιτηρευτοῖς πᾶσι καὶ ἀσχημένους ἃ ἔργη ταῦτά ἐστι· Τῷ τέπτοντί σου τὴν σιγήν· ἀπέχεσθαι καὶ τὴν ἄλλην, καὶ τὸν ἀφροντῆν σου τὸν χιτῶνα ἢ τὸ ἱμάτιον μὴ κολύσης. (Mat. v. 39, 40; Luke vi. 29.) Ὅς δ' ἂν ὁργισθῇ, ἐνοχὸς ἐστιν εἰς τὸ πῦρ. (Mat. v. 22.) Παντὶ δὲ ἀγγαρεύοντί σε μίλιον ἀκολούθησον δύο. (Mat. v. 41.) Λαμψάτω δὲ ὑμῶν τὰ καλὰ ἔργα ἐμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἵνα βλέποντες θαυμάζωσι τὸν πατέρα ὑμῶν τὸν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. (Mat. v. 16.)<sup>5</sup>

Apol. I. c. 16. p. 63 D.<sup>6</sup> Περὶ δὲ τοῦ μὴ ὁμνῆναι ὅλως, τάληθῇ δὲ λέγειν αἰεὶ, οὕτως παρεκλείσατο· Μὴ ὁμῶσιτε ὅλως, ἔστι δὲ ὑμῶν τὸ ναὶ ναὶ καὶ τὸ οὐ οὐ· τὸ δὲ περισσὸν τούτων ἐκ τοῦ ποτηροῦ. (Mat. v. 34, 37.) Ὡς δὲ καὶ τὸν Θεὸν μόνον δεῖ προσκυνεῖν, οὕτως ἐπίεισεν εἰπὼν· Μεγίστη ἐντολή ἐστι· Κύριον τὸν Θεὸν σου προσκυνήσεις καὶ αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας σου καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ἰσχύος σου, Κύριον τὸν Θεὸν τὸν ποιήσαντά σε. Καὶ προσελθόντος αὐτῷ τινος καὶ εἰπόντος· Διδάσκαλε ἀγαθὲ, ἀπεκρίνατο λέγων· Οὐδεὶς ἀγαθὸς εἰ μὴ μόνος ὁ Θεός, ὁ ποιήσας τὰ πάντα.<sup>7</sup> (See Mat. iv. 10; xix. 16; xxii. 37; Mark xii. 30. Compare Dial. c. 93. p. 32 A.) Οἱ δ' ἂν μὴ εἰρίσκωνται βιοῦντες ὥς ἐδίδαξε γνωριζέσθωσαν μὴ ὅτιες Χριστιανοί, καὶ λέγωσιν διὰ γλώττης τὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ διδάγματα· οὐ γὰρ τοὺς μόνον λέγοντας ἀλλὰ τοὺς καὶ τὰ ἔργα πράττοντας σωθήσεσθαι ἔφη. Εἶπε γὰρ

<sup>6</sup> See also Clem. Hom. III. 56; XIX. 2. These words are often found with wonderful variation. See James v. 12; Epiph. Haer. 19. 2; Clem. Alex. V. 14; and an apparent allusion in the testimony of James prefixed to Clem. Hom. μὴ ὀρκίσαι, ἐπεὶ μὴ ἔξεστιν.

<sup>7</sup> For the reading of Jesus's answer we cannot appeal to Justin, as he has it in two forms. One is in the text and the other in Dial. c. 101. p. 328 A: Τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; Εἷς ἐστιν ἀγαθός, ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

Apol. I. c. 31. p. 73 A. Ἐν δὴ ταῖς τῶν προφητῶν βίβλοις εὔρομεν προκηρυσσόμενον παραγινόμενον, γεννώμενον διὰ παρθένου, καὶ ἀνδρούμενον, καὶ θεραπεύοντα πᾶσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶσαν μαλακίαν καὶ νεκροὺς ἀνεγείροντα &c. &c. (Mat. iv. 23.)

Apol. I. c. 33. p. 74 D. Καὶ πάλιν ὡς αὐτολεξεὶ διὰ παρθένου μὲν τεχνησόμενος διὰ τοῦ Ἡσαΐου προφητεῖσθαι, ἀκούσατε. Ἐλέχθη δὲ οὕτως· Ἰδοὺ ἡ παρθένος ἐν γαστρὶ ἔξει καὶ τέξεται υἱόν, καὶ ἐροῦσιν ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ Μεθ' ἡμῶν ὁ Θεός. (Mat. i. 23; compare Isaiah vii. 14; see Luke i. 31.)

<sup>8</sup> We have the same occurrence described in Dial. c. 76. p. 301 D furnishing in its variations another instance of Justin's untrustworthy mode of quotation. In both passages however Justin has ἐφάγομεν καὶ ἐπίομεν. (See the passage as quoted below.)

<sup>12</sup> This paragraph is strangely made up. The phrases are almost all from the Gospels, but they are not in the same order as in any Gospel. Justin quotes them again, but in a new order—again ending with the emphatic τυφλοὶ ὁδοῖ. This shows that he did not alter the order of our Gospels because of following some other one exemplar. We append the other passage for comparison: Dial. c. 112. p. 339 D: Τάφοι κεκοσμημένοι, ἔξωθεν φαινόμενοι ὡραῖοι καὶ ἔσωθεν γεμοντες ὀστέων νεκρῶν, τὸν ἰδύοσμον ἀποδεκατοῦντες, τὴν δὲ κἀμῆλον καταπίνοντες· τυφλοὶ ὁδοῖ.

<sup>14</sup> This occurs in Justin's reply to Trypho's objection that Elias must come before Christ; and that Elias has not come, so that Christ must be held as not θεζόμενος ἐβόα· Ἐγὼ μὲν ὑμᾶς βαπτίζω ἐν ὕδατι εἰς μετάνοιαν· ἥξει δὲ ὁ ἰσχυρότερός μου, οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἰσχυρὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα βαστάσαι· αὐτὸς ὑμᾶς βαπτίσει ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρὶ. Οὗ τὸ πτύον αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ διακαθαριεῖ τὴν ἄλωνα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸν σῖτον συνάξει εἰς τὴν ἀποθήκην, τὸ δὲ ἄχρον κατακαύσει πυρὶ ἀσβέστω. Καὶ τοῦτον αὐτὸν τὸν προφήτην συνεκεκλείκει ὁ βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν Ἡρώδης εἰς φυλακὴν, καὶ γενεσίων ἡμέρας τελουμένης, ὀρχουμένης τῆς ξαδελφῆς αὐτοῦ εὐαρέστως αὐτῷ, εἶπεν αὐτῇ αἰτήσασθαι ὃ ἂν βούληται. Καὶ ἡ μήτηρ τῆς παιδὸς ἐπέβαλεν αὐτῇ αἰτήσασθαι τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου τοῦ ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ· καὶ αἰτησάσης ἐλεησεν καὶ ἐπὶ πίνακι ἐνεχθῆναι τὴν κεφαλὴν Ἰωάννου ἐκέλευσε. Αὐτὸ καὶ ὁ ἡμέτερος Χριστὸς εἰρῇζει ἐπὶ γῆς τότε τοῖς λέγουσι πρὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἠλίαν δεῖν ἐλθεῖν· Ἠλίας μὲν ἐλείσεται, καὶ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα· λέγω δὲ ἡμῖν, ὅτι Ἠλίας ἤδη ἦλθε, καὶ οὐκ ἐπέγνωσαν αὐτὸν, ἀλλ' ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ ὅσα ἠθέλησαν. Καὶ γέγραπται ὅτι Τότε συνῆκαν οἱ μαθηταὶ ὅτι περὶ Ἰωάννου τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς.<sup>15</sup> (Mat. iii. 11, 12; xiv. 5-11; xvii. 11-13.)

Dial. c. 76. p. 301 C. Ἐξουσιν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν καὶ δυσμῶν, καὶ ἀνακληθήσονται μετὰ Ἀβραάμ καὶ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακώβ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν· οἱ δὲ υἱοὶ τῆς βασιλείας ἐκβληθήσονται εἰς τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον. Καί· Πολλοὶ ἐροῦσί μοι τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ, Κύριε, Κύριε, οὐκ ἐγὼ σὺ ὀνόματι ἐφάγομεν καὶ ἐπίομεν καὶ προσεφειγέσασμεν καὶ δαιμόνια ἐξεβάλομεν; Καὶ ἐρῶ αὐτοῖς· yet come. Justin, after asserting that Zechariah (compare c. 14, where he quotes Hosea as Zechariah) has predicted the coming of Elias, goes on to identify John Baptist with Elias. His argument is that the spirit of Elias coming in John was the forerunner of the first advent, and that Elijah will come as the forerunner of the second or glorious advent. He quotes our Lord's own teaching as referring back to the Baptist and forward to Elias. He is quoting from John Baptist when the extract begins.

<sup>15</sup> In this passage there is a change from the present tense (ἔρχεται Mark i. 7; Luke iii. 16, ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἰσχυρότερός μου ἐστίν Mat. iii. 11) into the future ἥξει δέ. So also in Dial. c. 88, Justin has ἥξει γάρ for the same passage. Justin's whole argument (which is not peculiar to him) may be founded on a mistaken interpretation so far as regards the second advent, but his adherence to the Gospels in his quotation is close. Clem. Alex. and Origen vary from the Evangelists more than Justin does. Though Justin alters ἔρχεται into a future (see the same in c. 35 as quoted before), he does no violence to the text. And in Mat. xvii. 11 the whole is made future by our Lord himself at the time of the Transfiguration: Ἠλίας μὲν ἔρχεται πρῶτον καὶ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα, although he goes on to say ὅτι Ἠλίας ἤδη ἦλθε. See also below Dial. c. 88. 316 B. for a parallel to the whole passage.

<sup>17</sup> Justin nine times says that the Magi came from Arabia (St Matthew says merely ἀπ' ἀνατολῶν), and his references to them are so numerous that this must be regarded as his complete conviction. The facts, that Arabia is called "the East" in the O. T., Judges vi. 3; Job i. 3 (but see also for a wider reference Gen. xxix. 1; Num. xxiii. 7; Isaiah xlv. 11), and that it produces the gifts which the Magi brought, may be the foundation of this view; which see also in Tertullian adv. Marc. III. 13, and Epiph. Haer. III. 80. On the other hand, Clem. Alex., Origen, Chrysostom, &c., say that they came from Persia or Chaldea.

<sup>19</sup> This citation is from Micah v. 2, and is found also word for word in Apol. I. c. 34. Justin's words correspond much more closely with Mat. ii. 6 than with the LXX, where the passage runs thus: Καὶ σὺ Βηθλεὲμ οἶκος Ἐφραθᾶ, ὀλιγοστὸς εἶ τοῦ εἶναι ἐν χιλιᾷσιν Ἰούδα· ἐκ σοῦ μοι ἐξελεύσεται τοῦ εἶναι εἰς ἄρχοντα τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ. There are other instances of Justin resembling Matthew's Gospel in citing the O. T. Thus in Apol. I. c. 35 he cites (as from Zephaniah) Zech. ix. 9, but except in the opening call he follows Mat. xxi. 5, not the LXX. (He quotes the same passage Dial. c. 53. p. 273 A with the right reference to Zechariah and more in accordance with the LXX.) So also in Dial. c. 17. p. 235 C he combines Isaiah lvi. 7 and Jeremiah vii. 11 as in Mat. xxi. 13; and the combination is too remarkable in itself to allow us to think the similarity accidental.  παρακληθῆναι, ὅτι οὐκ εἰσίν.<sup>22</sup> (Compare Mat. ii. 18; Luke ii.)

 λαιον, ἐνθα ἐγεννήθη, καὶ ἡ ἐν τῷ σπηλαίῳ φάτνη, ἐνθα ἐσπαργανώθη.

 which runs thus: Φωνὴ ἐν Ῥαμᾷ ἠκούσθη βρῆνου καὶ κλαυθμοῦ καὶ ὁδὸς ἡ πολὺς.
 Ῥαχὴλ ἀποκλαυμένη οὐκ ᾔθελε παύσασθαι ἐπὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς αὐτῆς, ὅτι οὐκ εἰσίν.

Dial. c. 88. p. 316 B. Ἰωάννου γὰρ καθεζομένου<sup>23</sup> ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰορδάνου καὶ κηρύσσοντος βάπτισμα μετανοίας, καὶ ζώνην θερμαίνην καὶ ἔνδυμα ἀπὸ τριχῶν καμῆλον μόνον φοροῦντος καὶ μηδὲν ἐσθίωντος πλὴν ἀκριδᾶς καὶ μέλι ἄγριον, οἱ ἄνθρωποι ἐπελάμβανον αὐτὸν εἶναι τὸν Χριστόν· πρὸς οὓς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐβόα· Οὐκ εἰμὶ ὁ Χριστός, ἀλλὰ φωνὴ βοῶντος· ἤξει γὰρ ὁ ἰσχυρότερός μου, οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανός τὰ ἐποδήματα βαστάσαι. Καὶ ἐλθόντος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰορδάνην, καὶ νομιζομένου Ἰωσήφ τοῦ τέκτονος εἰς τὸ ἐπάρχειν, καὶ ἀειδοῦς, ὡς αἱ γραφαὶ ἐκέρυσσον, γα-νομένον, καὶ τέκτονος<sup>24</sup> νομιζομένου (ταῦτα γὰρ τὰ τεκτονικὰ ἔργα εἰργάζετο ἐν ἀνθρώποις ὢν, ἄροτρα καὶ ζυγὰ, διὰ τούτων καὶ τὰ τῆς δικαιοσύνης σύμβολα διδάσκειν καὶ ἐνεργῇ βίον), τὸ πνεῦμα οἶν τὸ ἅγιον καὶ διὰ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ὡς προέφην, ἐν εἰδὲι περιστρεφῶς ἐπέπτη<sup>25</sup> αὐτῷ, καὶ φωνὴ ἐκ τῶν οὐρανῶν ἤμα ἐληλήθει, ἥτις καὶ διὰ Δαυὶδ λεγομένη, ὡς ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ λέγοντος ὅπερ αὐτῷ ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς ἔμελλε λέγεσθαι·<sup>26</sup>

<sup>23</sup> Justin elsewhere also speaks of John "sitting" by the Jordan (Dial. cc. 49, 51). Evidently therefore this addition to the canonical narrative was in his opinion a historical fact. The other items of the opening description are canonical. See Mat. iii. 1; iv. 11; Mark i. 4; Luke iii. 3, 15; John i. 20, 23.

<sup>24</sup> See Mark vi. 3. There Jesus is called a carpenter; but the description here of the work he did is additional. In the Gospel of Thomas (Greek A. C. XIII) ploughs and yokes are also stated to have been made by Jesus. There are in the Apocryphal Gospels many other details of miracles &c. connected with the opening years of Christ's manhood. In Origen's time—probably from mistaken pride—the reading in Mark seems to have omitted τέκτων; for Origen denies that Jesus is so called in the published Gospels. (Cont. Cels. VI. 36.)

<sup>26</sup> The voice is said in another passage of the Dial. (c. 103. p. 331 B) to have used those words (which are a quotation from Ps. ii). In this passage it is not said that the memoirs are the authority. In the other passage the memoirs are not quoted for the voice, although they are quoted for other parts of the narrative. This form of the words addressed to our Lord is therefore an uncanonical addition. It must have been widely spread, being found in the Vetus Italica and in Cod. D; and in many of the early fathers (Clem. Alex., Lactantius, &c.). Augustine expressly says that it was the reading of some of the MSS of Luke iii. 22, though not of the earliest. The supposition that Justin in agreeing with a Jew thought to add weight to his argument by substituting a quotation from the Psalms for the canonical words, is both unnecessary and improbable. The version of Justin is in accordance with a very early tradition which probably arose from lapse of memory. Many Christians at this day would give the same account as Justin; and the application of the words of the psalm to Jesus Christ in the New Testament (Acts xiii. 33; Heb. i. 5) makes the mistake natural enough.

<sup>1</sup> The predictions of schism and heresies are not found in our Gospels. The quotations before and after this clause are from St. Matthew. Justin seems again to refer to this prediction, Dial. c. 57. The same reference may perhaps have been in Paul's mind, 1 Cor. xi. 18, 19. The Clementine Homilies XVI. 2 combine the two predictions, ἔσονται γάρ, ὡς ὁ Κύριος εἶπεν, ψευδαπόστολοι, ψευδεῖς προφῆται, αἵρέσεις φιλαρχίαι. Hegesippus (Eus. H. E. IV. 22) speaks of false Christs, false prophets, false apostles. So also Clem. Recog. IV. 34. The prediction of heresies is found also in Tertullian. The words are therefore found both before and after the time when the canonical Gospels had an exclusive place. Even a writer so late as Lactantius refers to the prediction of Heresies, whether from an apocryphal Gospel or only from oral tradition we have no means of deciding. To say that the source must be the Gospel of the Hebrews because Hegesippus made exclusive use of it, is to build too much on a narrow foundation. See Dial. c. 51. p. 271 B (below), and Dial. c. 82. p. 308 C for the same prophecy with the variations we might expect in Justin.

<sup>2</sup> Clem. Alex. has quoted the same passage or very nearly. His words are ἐφ' οἷς γὰρ ἂν εὗρω ὑμᾶς, φησὶν, ἐπὶ τοῖτοις καὶ κρινῶ. In later times it was widely current, being attributed to Ezekiel or some other. It is argued that because Clement on another occasion has quoted the Gospel according to the Hebrews therefore both Justin and he obtained this also from that Gospel. But while this is possible, it is only a hypothesis. See also Acts xx. 35, where we have a saying of our Lord preserved by tradition. May not this be an example of the same thing?

<sup>3</sup> This, in so far as it is not a quotation, seems to be a blending from memory of our Lord's predictions with the Gospel narrative.

<sup>4</sup> This is a perfectly justifiable allusion to the Jewish treatment of our Lord as working by the power of Beelzebub (Mat. ix. 34; xii. 24). Lactantius says that the Jews thought Christ a Magician, and grants that such an opinion might have been entertained had not the prophets predicted such things of the Messiah. In the Clem. Recog. we have allusions to the idea that Christ wrought by magic. And in the "Gospel of Nicodemus" the Jews before Pilate charge Jesus with being a magician.

<sup>5</sup> The construction here shows that the narrative of the kindling of a fire in the Jordan does not depend, as the reference to the descent of the Dove does, upon the testimony of the Apostles. The punctuation is disputed; but if we read ἀνῆφθῃ, and there is no good reason for any other reading, the rules of construction separate the one clause from the other. The Apostles are therefore quoted only for the descent of the Spirit. In all the Gospels καταβαίνω describes the descent of the Spirit; here it is ἐπιπτῆναι; but the change is quite in Justin's manner. The passage occurs in course of an argument used by Justin to prove that the outward manifestations given to Christ did not make him the Christ, but only proved to men that He was the Christ. The mention of the fire is incidental; but the argument admits of the speaker supplementing the canonical Gospels from other sources. There are many allusions to the fire in the apocryphal traditions of the early Church. According to Epiphanius the Ebionite Gospel said that when Jesus was coming up out of the water a great light shone about the place. A heretical Gospel called Pauli Predicatio refers to the fire, saying also that Jesus who acknowledged personal sin was constrained by his mother Mary to submit to John's Baptism. Although Justin therefore clearly supplements the canonical books: we cannot be sure of his source.

<sup>6</sup> The "Memoirs" are quoted here for our Lord's singing hymns with His brethren according to the prediction in the psalm. There is incidentally mention of all the disciples forsaking Him, when He was crucified, and it is explicitly stated elsewhere (Apol. I. c. 50. 86 B) that they forsook Him after He was crucified. But nothing more than rhetorical use, perhaps amplification, of the Gospel narrative can be made out against Justin. See Mat. xxvi. 56; Mark xiv. 50; Luke xxiv. 13-33.

<sup>4</sup> This passage refers to the incident in Herod's history which we learn from Mat. ii. Epiphanius says that the Gospel of the Hebrews, as used by the Nazarenes and Ebionites, did not contain the first two chapters of Matthew's Gospel. Hegesippus cannot therefore have used it as his authority here. See even Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. extra Can. Rec. Evang. sec. Hebraeos, p. 19).

(Mat. xiii. 16.)

<sup>5</sup> Hegesippus here reproduces the peculiar use of ἀφίεναι in the sense of 'to forgive' without an expressed object. There is no instance of this in the N. T. save in S. Luke. (See Sanday, Gospels in the Second Century, p. 143.)

<sup>6</sup> It seems most probable that Eusebius refers to the natural use made by Hegesippus of the Aramaic and the Hebrew Gospels, unless indeed these be the same thing. Lardner suggests that we have the true rendering undesignedly given by Jerome (adv. Pelag. III) In Evangelicis juxta Hebraeos, quod Chaldaico quidem Syroque sermone, sed Hebraicis literis scriptum est. (Lardner I. 357.)

Facite ergo fructum dignum poenitentiae. Et nolite dicere in vobis ipsis: Patrem habemus Abraham: dico enim vobis, quoniam potens est Deus ex lapidibus istis suscitare filios Abrahae.” (Mat. iii. 7 &c.) Poenitentiam igitur eis eam, quae esset a malitia, praeconabat, sed non alterum Deum annuntiabat, praeter eum qui fecisset promissionem Abrahae, ille praecursor Christi; de quo iterum ait Matthaeus, similiter autem et Lucas: “Hic enim est qui dictus est

Ecce virgo in utero accipiet, et pariet filium, et vocabunt nomen ejus Emmanuel, quod est interpretatum: Nobiscum Deus." De hoc, qui est ex virgine Emmanuel, dixit David: "Non avertas faciem Christi tui. Juravit Dominus David veritatem, et non spernet<sup>2</sup> eum, de fructu ventris tui ponam super sedem tuam." (Ps. cxxxi. 10, 11.) Et iterum: "Notus in Judaea Deus, et factus est in pace locus ejus, et habitaculum ejus in Sion." (Ps. lxxv. 2.) Unus igitur et idem Deus, qui a prophetis praedicatus est, et ab evangelio<sup>3</sup> annuntiatus, et hujus filius qui ex fructu ventris David, id est, ex David virgine, et Emmanuel: cujus et stellam Balaam quidem sic prophetavit: "Orietur stella ex Jacob, et surget dux in Israel." (Num. xxiv. 15.) Matthaeus autem Magos ab Oriente venientes ait dixisse: "Vidimus enim stellam ejus in Oriente, et venimus adorare eum:" deductosque a stella in domum Jacob ad Emmanuel, per ea quae obtulerunt munera ostendisse, quis erat qui adorabatur: myrrham quidem, quod ipse erat, qui pro mortali humano genere moreretur et sepeliretur: aurum vero, quoniam Rex, "cujus regni finis non est;" thus vero, quoniam Deus, qui et notus in Judaea factus est, et manifestus eis, qui non quaerebant eum. Adhuc ait in baptismo Matthaeus: "Aperti sunt ei coeli, et vidit Spiritum Dei, quasi columbam venientem super eum. Et ecce vox de coelo, dicens: Hic est filius meus, in quo mihi bene complacui."

III. 16. § 2. Sed et Matthaeus unum et eundem Jesum Christum cognoscens, eam quae est secundum hominem generationem ejus ex virgine exponens, sicut promisit Deus David, ex fructu ventris ejus excitaturum se aeternum regem, multo prius

Dehinc cum Joseph cogitaret dimittere Mariam, quoniam prægnans erat, adistentem ei angelum Dei, dicentem: "Ne timueris assumere Mariam conjugem tuam: quod enim habet in utero, de Spiritu Sancto est. Pariet autem filium, et vocabis nomen ejus Jesum: hic enim salvabit populum suum a peccatis suis. Hoc autem factum est, ut impleretur quod dictum est a Domino per prophetam: Ecce virgo accipiet in utero, et pariet filium, et vocabunt nomen ejus Emmanuel, quod est, Nobiscum Deus;" manifeste significans, et eam promissionem, quæ fuerat ad patres, impletam, ex virgine natum filium Dei, et hunc ipsum esse salvatorem Christum, quem prophetae prædicaverunt: non sicut ipsi dicunt, Jesum quidem ipsum esse, qui ex Maria sit natus, Christum vero qui desuper descendit.

<sup>1</sup> This testimony is valuable as being independent of that of Papias and those who follow him. By India it is supposed that Southern Arabia is denoted. Pantaenus flourished in the end of the second century, and was the teacher of Clem. Alex. Eusebius has been speaking of the first year of the reign of Commodus (c. 9), and it was at that date (A.D. 192) therefore that, according to him, Pantaenus was the head of the Alexandrian School. There is difficulty in understanding what is meant by τελευτῶν in the last sentence of our extract, because Clement succeeded Pantaenus about A.D. 189. Was Pantaenus twice at the head of the School, before and after his missionary tour?

<sup>1</sup> Although the Clementine Homilies are more largely quoted afterwards when the relation of Heretics and of Judaeo-Christian sects to the Church falls to be considered, there are some references given here in order that the catena of Testimonies may be more complete. For a discussion of the place and influence of the Clementines see Introduction. The Latin form of the Christian Romance—the Recognitions—seems on many grounds to be less valuable for our purpose than that from which we quote—the Homilies.

παρῆλθον θυσία, βασιλεῖα, αἱ ἐν γεννητοῖς γενναίων προφητεῖαι, καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα, ὡς οἶκ' ὄντα Θεοῦ προστάγματα, ἔνθεν γοῦν λέγει· Πᾶσα φυτεία, ἣν οὐκ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ πατήρ ὁ οὐράνιος, ἐκριζωθήσεται (Mat. xv. 13). Διὰ τοῦτο αὐτοὺς ἀληθῆς ὢν προφήτης ἔλεγεν· Ἐγὼ εἰμὶ ἡ πύλη τῆς ζωῆς· ὁ δὲ ἐμοῦ εἰσερχόμενος εἰσέρχεται εἰς τὴν ζωὴν (John x. 9), ὡς οἶκ' οὔσις εἰέρας τῆς σωζείν διναμένης διδασκαλίας. He is even bold enough to suggest that the words, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," may not be genuine, inasmuch as they are not in Mark or Luke. The chief significance of his words lies in the fact of so many divergences in MSS of the New Testament in his day. It shows that the Books had been in circulation for a long time before. See also Origen, Comm. in Rom. IV. 687 and below. The testimony of Irenaeus is still more notable from the same point of view (Book V. 30. 1), for at his earlier date the same phenomena of conflicting manuscripts were seen. See Scrivener, Int. to Textual Crit., p. 449 for examination of those facts. Origen says elsewhere (c. Cels. II. p. 77) that he "did not know any that had altered the text of the Gospels designedly except the followers of Marcion and Valentinus and perhaps also of Lucanus."

<sup>2</sup> This passage says that Matthew wrote for Hebrews. In a passage preserved by Eus. H. E. VI. 25 (see before, page 8) he says that the Gospel was γράμμασιν Ἑβραϊκοῖς συντεταγμένον. He repeats the statement in our text in his Comm. in Joh. I. 6 (see before, p. 85). It is remarkable, however, that Origen never makes any use of the said Hebrew original of Matthew. See his remarks on the New Testament renderings of Hebrew (Acts xiii. 33) in the fragments left by him on Psalms ii and iii. (Migne, vol. VI. P. 1. p. 575, &c.)

<sup>1</sup> Julius Africanus, a contemporary of Origen, lived in Palestine, is said to have been Bishop of Emmaus. Author of a Chronographia from the Creation to A.D. 221, which Eusebius and others quote. The following extract is from his letter to Aristides, notable as an attempt to explain the discrepancy in the Genealogies of Matthew and Luke. The attempt implies the acceptance of both at the time he wrote. There is a remarkable correspondence between the extract as given by Eusebius and the Hortatory Address to the Greeks which is ascribed to Justin Martyr.

<sup>1</sup> There may be doubt as to what οἰκεῖα ἐκδοσις means. It is clear that Eusebius means at least to intimate Matthew's independence of the translations of Symmachus and Aquila. If we can suppose Matthew to have been the translator of his own Gospel from Hebrew into Greek, this passage may be reconciled

It is remarkable that he does not claim to have used it in making his own version: "Novum Testamentum Graecae fidei reddidi. Vetus juxta Hebraicam retuli." (De vir. ill. c. 135.) He says elsewhere that he translated into Greek the Gospel which the Nazarenes and Ebionites use, which is called by many the authentic Gospel of Matthew; he says

1. ΠΑΠΙΑΣ.

Eus. II. E. III. 39. Περὶ Μάρκον . . . ὁ πρεσβύτερος ἔλεγε· Μάρκος μὲν ἑρμηνευτὴς Πέτρον κ.τ.λ. (see before pp. 56, 57 and notes there).<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Early tradition consistently maintains a close connection between Mark's Gospel and the Apostle Peter. From Papias downwards the testimony is clear. He is said by Papias to have been the ἑρμηνευτής, by Irenaeus to have been interprēs et sectator, of Peter. Jerome gives a very concrete meaning to the word ἑρμηνευτής, when he says that as Paul needed an interpreter to furnish him with suitable Greek, and employed Titus in that capacity, so also Peter needed and employed Mark. See the more general references to him as interpreter and follower of Peter in the quotations in our text from Papias, Irenaeus, and Tertullian. But whatever was the special relation denoted by ἑρμηνευτής, it is admitted to have been intimate. The expression in 1 Peter v. 13, Μάρκος ὁ υἱός μου, is supposed to indicate it. The tradition also is that "Babylon," of which Peter speaks in the same epistle, was Rome; although it has been supposed in later times that Peter wrote from the literal Babylon, to which he had gone with Mark for his companion. Mark is said to have been the founder and first Bishop of the Church in Alexandria; and Jerome says, he suffered martyrdom in the eighth year of Nero. (Hieron. de Vir. Ill. c. 8.) There is also such warrant as tradition can give for identifying him with the John Mark of whom we read in Acts xii. 12, that he was the son of Mary who had a house in Jerusalem where brethren assembled for prayer. To this house Peter went direct when set free from prison. We read of "John surnamed Mark" going with Barnabas and Saul on their missionary journey (Acts xii. 25), and of (apparently the same) John being the minister (ὕμνητής) of those Apostles (Acts xiii. 5) until he turned back from them at Perga (Acts xiii. 13). This "John surnamed Mark" was the cause of dissension between the two Apostles after the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 37). Under the name of Mark we have him (Coloss. iv. 10) joined in Paul's salutations as the kinsman (ἀνεψιός) of Barnabas, with a peculiar and significant reference to certain directions which had been given for his proper reception and treatment. The reference may be supposed to intimate that the Colossians were to regard him as one whose present devotedness to Paul atoned for his past defection. He is also joined in the salutation (Philem. 24). In the last letter of Paul he is longed for as "very useful for service" (2 Tim. iv. 11). This close alliance of John Mark with Paul has led some to distinguish between him and the author of the Gospel and "interpreter" of Peter. Hippolytus (in a fragment on the 70 Apostles) even distinguishes three: the Evangelist (Bishop of Alexandria), the cousin of Barnabas (Bishop of Apollonia), and John Mark (Bishop of Biblionopolis). But ordinary tradition leads us to believe that the same person—the Evangelist—was the companion and helper of Barnabas and Paul and Peter. A later tradition makes him one of the 70 disciples (Pseudo-Origen, De recta in Deum fide, § 1),

2. BARNABAS. CLEMENT. HERMAS.

1 Clem. 15. Λέγει γάρ πον· Οὗτος ὁ λαὸς τοῖς χεῖλεσίν με

and Epiphanius (Haer. 51. 6) adds that he was one of those who "went away" from Jesus (John vi. 66) until Peter brought him back. In our own day it is usual to identify him with the "young man" who first impulsively followed Jesus at the end, and with equal impulsiveness fled away. The quotations from Clement of Alexandria and Origen and Tertullian give with varying details the same testimony to the close connection between Peter and Mark's Gospel. His Gospel shows that he wrote to Gentiles who were familiar with Latin words (vi. 27; xii. 42, &c.) and who needed explanations of Jewish customs (ii. 18; vii. 1-4; xiv. 14; xv. 6, &c.). Gregory of Nazianzum says, the Gospel was written in Italy (which agrees with the oldest tradition), but Chrysostom says it was written in Egypt. Augustine contradicts the statements as to Mark's Gospel being a written record of Peter's preaching when he says that Mark came after Matthew as one who abridged him and trode in his very footsteps. But when the reason is given that Mark has little in common with John and very little peculiar to himself, Augustine is overlooking the remarkable fulness of graphic detail which distinguishes Mark from Matthew even when the same incidents are recorded. (Aug. de consensu Evangelistarum, I. 4.)

<sup>2</sup> Barsabas, as Eusebius states in next sentence (see p. 56), is named in Acts i. 23 as "Joseph called Barsabas." Possibly the words in the text are a slip for Ἰωσήφ τὸν καλούμενον Βαρσαββᾶν. There may be in this passage a reference to the promise in Mark; but there is no parallel use of words, and the mere statement that an early disciple took poison without being harmed does not afford much ground for the argument that its author had the passage of St Mark in view.

<sup>1</sup> Justin, like Mark, has ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ἰσχύος σου, and so also has Luke x. 27. But the coincidence is not verbal, since Justin (both here and Dial. c. 93. p. 321 A) has only ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας . . . ἰσχύος, while Mark has also ψυχῆς . . . διανοίας. Luke has the same nouns as Mark, but with ἐν not ἐξ in the best MSS for all save καρδίας. The Scribe in his reply does not repeat the same words, v. 33.

<sup>2</sup> Mark alone calls Christ a carpenter. The Apocryphal Gospels (see Ev. Thom. c. 13 &c.) expand the fact into details as Justin does. There is in Orig. c. Cels. VI. 36 a strange denial that our Gospels ever call Christ τέκτων. Celsus had stated that he was τέκτων τῇ τέχνῃ.

<sup>3</sup> Justin's phrase ἀπομ. αὐτοῦ is without a parallel in his writings (see Introduction on 'Justin's Memoirs'). If it be retained, we must suppose him to refer to Peter (in which case he confirms the tradition that Mark's Gospel represents Peter's preaching), or to Christ. Otto supposes that (1) αὐτοῦ is a mistake for αὐτῶν, and gives many examples of a similar confusion of singular and plural genitives in MSS of Justin; or (2) ἀποστρέλων has been omitted before αὐτοῦ. In the latter case the passage would be parallel to that in c. 100 already quoted

Apol. I. c. 39. p. 78 A. Ἀπὸ γὰρ Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἄνδρες δεκαδύο τὸν ἄριθμὸν ἐξῆλθον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, καὶ οὗτοι ἰδιῶται, λαλεῖν μὴ δυνάμενοι· διὰ δὲ Θεοῦ δυνάμεως ἐμήνυσαν παντὶ γένει ἄνθρωπων, ὥς ἀπεισιδάμην ἐπὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ διδάξαι πάντας τὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγον. (Mark xvi. 20.)

Apol. I. c. 49. p. 85 A. Οἱ ἐπὶ Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐξεληθόντες ἀπόστολοι αὐτοῦ ἐμήνυσαν τὰ περὶ αὐτοῦ. (Mark xvi. 20.)

Apol. I. c. 50. p. 86 A. Μετὰ οὖν τὸ σταυρωθῆναι αὐτὸν καὶ οἱ γνώριμοι αὐτοῦ πάντες ἀπέσιλσαν . . . καὶ εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀνερχόμενον ἰδόντες καὶ πιστεύσαντες (Luke xxiv. 49) καὶ δύναμιν ἐξεῖθεν αὐτοῖς πεμφθεῖσαν παρ’ αὐτοῦ λαβόντες καὶ εἰς πᾶν γένος ἀνθρώπων ἐλθόντες, ταῦτα ἐδίδαξαν καὶ ἀπόστολοι προσηγορεύθησαν. (See Mark xvi. 19; John xv. 26, 27.)

Dial. c. 32. p. 249 E. Ὅπερ γίνεται ἐξ ὅτου εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν in which is recorded the change of Peter's name. (Mat. xvi. 18, but emphatically Mark iii. 16.) These however are mere conjectures, and, as the passage stands, ἀπομνημονεύματα αὐτοῦ naturally mean Peter's Memoirs, which, however elliptical, is expressive enough. The reference of αὐτοῦ to Christ is contrary to the usages of Justin, who designates the authors in the genitive following ἀπομνημονεύματα.

<sup>4</sup> Although it is not easy to show that Justin had Mark's Gospel specially in view when quoting or referring to the Memoirs, or when narrating the events of Christ's life, the foregoing are beyond dispute references to Mark's Gospel, and those which follow refer to our Lord's Ascension and the enduing of the disciples with power, in terms which sometimes suggest Luke and sometimes Mark as the source from which they are taken. For a discussion of the genuineness of the close of the Gospel after ἐφελθόντο γάρ see Burgon on “the Last Twelve Verses of St Mark.” The ascension to heaven of which Justin often speaks cannot have been learned from Matthew's Gospel. It is to be noted however that Justin often uses ἀνέρχομαι and other words, while the word in Scripture is ἀναλαμβάνω. As Tisch. N. T. p. 407 and Burgon p. 25 refer to this, I may refer to all the passages (besides Apol. I. c. 50, quoted in the text): Apol. I. c. 26, ἀνέλευσιν τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Apol. I. c. 26; Dial. c. 39, εἰς τ. οὐρανὸν ἀνέλευσιν. But Dial. c. 82, ἄνοδον τὴν εἰς οὐρανόν. See Apol. c. 45, ἀγαγεῖν τὸν Χριστὸν εἰς τ. οὐρανόν ὁ πατήρ. In Dial. c. 32 we have ἀνηλήφθη; c. 38, ἀναβεβηκέναι, c. 85 ἀναβάντος, c. 126, ἀναβάντα. In Dial. c. 132 the words are ἀνεληλυθότα εἰς τοὺς οὐρανοὺς. The only use of ἀναλαμβάνω I can find is that in Dial. c. 32 (see Text).

4. IRENÆUS.

B. III. 1. (See before, p. 67, and note there.)

B. III. 10, 6. Quapropter et Marcus interpres et sectator Petri, initium evangelicæ conscriptionis fecit sic: "Initium Evangelii Jesu Christi Filii Dei, quemadmodum scriptum est in Prophetis: Ecce, mitto angelum meum ante faciem tuam, qui præparabit viam tuam. Vox clamantis in deserto: Parate viam Domini, rectas facite semitas ante Deum nostrum." . . . In fine autem Evangelii ait Marcus: "Et quidem Dominus Jesus, postquam locutus est eis, receptus est in coelos, et sedet ad dexteram Dei." (Mark i. 1; xvi. 19.)<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> It is uncertain to what sect Irenæus refers here. Some (Grabe &c.) say Cerinthus and his followers. But Epiphanius says that they, as well as the Ebionites, used only Matthew's Gospel. Baur and others (following De Wette) think Mark xv. 37, 39 a text on which Gnostics would found, because the Centurion was convinced of Jesus being the Son of God by the loud cry with which the Spirit (that had been with Him) left Him on the cross. They quote Mark i. 26; v. 7; ix. 26 in proof that this Gospel regarded a loud cry as the proof of a supernatural spirit leaving a human body. But while Schwegler regarded the Gospel as Ebionite, Hilg. (Einl. 520) only speaks of "Gnostics" (without specifying which sect) who would be conciliated by such a passage as Mark xv. 37. In his "Evangelien Justins" (p. 281) Hilg. followed De Wette in calling the passage Doketic.

<sup>1</sup> See before, pages 67, 75, and notes. Clement's two traditions preserved by Eusebius: the one (H. E. II. 15) that Peter sanctioned the Gospel, and the other (H. E. VI. 14) that he was aware of its existence, but neither forbade nor encouraged its publication, are inconsistent with each other and with the distinct statement of Irenaeus III. 1 (see page 67 and note) that Mark gave his Gospel to the Church μετὰ τὴν τούτων (sc. τοῦ Πέτρου καὶ τοῦ Παύλου) ἔξοδον. The proposed reading in Irenaeus is: μετὰ τὴν τοῦ κατὰ Ματθαῖον εὐαγγελίου ἔκδοσιν, Μάρκος δὲ μαθητὴς κ.τ.λ. which gets over the difficulty, but somewhat violently.

αὐτοῖς λέγειν, οὗτοι τοὺς οὕτε Παῦλος ὁ ἀπόστολος, οὕτε Μάρκος ὁ κολοβοδάκτυλος ἀνήγγειλαν, (τούτων γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐν τῷ κατὰ Μάρκον εὐαγγελίῳ γέγραπται) κ.τ.λ.<sup>1</sup>

11. CLEMENTINE HOMILIES.

(See Introduction for discussion. For passages in full, see next part of this work.)

The following references may meanwhile be compared:

Hom. II. 19 (Mark vii. 25-30; Mat. xv. 28). Hom. III. 54 (Mark x. 5, 6; Mat. xix. 8). Hom. III. 55 (Mark xii. 27; Mat. xxii. 32; Luke xx. 38). Hom. III. 57 (Mark xii. 29). Hom. XIX. 20 (Mark iv. 34).

<sup>1</sup> In the preface to the Gospel of Mark ascribed to Jerome in the Cod. Amiatinus it is said of Mark: Denique amputasse sibi post fidem pollicem dicitur, ut sacerdotio reprobis haberetur. The same statement is found in an Arabic MS described by Fleischer: Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, Leipzig 1854, vol. VIII. p. 586. So far as this goes, it is in accordance with the statement (Col. iv. 10) that Mark was ἀνεψιὸς Βαρνάβα. If Mark was of Levitical extraction, the amputation of his thumb may have been his device to escape official duty in the temple. Duncker (see Duncker's Hippol. p. 393, note) supposes that Hippolytus wished to allude to the mutilated Gospel used by Marcion, and wrongly ascribed it to Mark. But this is unlikely: and is inconsistent with the text itself as given above, for the reference is not to Marcion's Gospel but to the actual Gospel of Mark.

<sup>1</sup> See before, page 80, for the whole passage. Tertullian seeks to establish the apostolic basis of the Gospels. Two were written by Apostles; the other two were mediately, if not immediately, of Apostolic authority. The chief interest of this extract is that Interpres is evidently the translation of ἐρμηνευτής; so also Jerome.

15. SPECIAL TESTIMONIES TO CLOSE OF THE GOSPEL.

The evidence on the genuineness of the disputed passage Mark xvi. 9-20 may be here summed up:<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The genuineness of this passage was disputed by Griesbach, and subsequent Editors have followed him. Tisch. (eighth edition) sums up the evidence with his usual clearness and succinctness. He prefixes "Haec non a Marco scripta esse argumentis probatur idoneis." The Manuscript Evidence against the verses is that  $\kappa$  omits them; B omits them, but leaves a blank column which would have contained them, the scribe being apparently uncertain whether or not to put them in (it is the only blank column in the whole volume); L (which usually follows B) closes a column with εφοβουντο γαρ and then at the top of the next column includes in flourishes φερετε που και ταυτα . . . after which it adds Παντα δε τα παρηγγελμενα τοις περι τον πετρον συντομως εξηγγιλαν † μετα δε ταυτα και αυτος ο ις απο ανατολης και αχρι δυσσεως εξαπιστιλεν δι αυτων το ιερον και αφθαρτον κηρυγμα † της αιωνιου σωτηριας †. And then, inclosed in further flourishes, the scribe says εστιν δε και ταυτα φερομενα μετα το εφοβουντο γαρ (see Burgon's Photograph, p. 112). This is all the MS evidence against the verses, save that some minor Codices of the Armenian and Aethiopic and one of the Old Latin (k) are on the same side. We may say therefore that  $\kappa$  and B omit the verses (the latter with some qualms); and that L has a view of its own. All other MSS (including ACD) contain the verses; as do the Peshito, Cur. and Jerus. Syriac, the Philoxenian text, the Sahidic, Memphitic, and Aethiopic, the Vulgate, all extant Old Latin MSS except the one (k) mentioned above. There is therefore an immense preponderance of authority in MSS and versions in favour of the verses. As regards the evidence of quotation by the Fathers it will be seen from our extracts that in the second century (omitting Papias) Barnabas and Justin seem to found upon the verses. Irenaeus certainly does. In the third century Hippolytus (A.D. 190 to 227), the Acts of Pilate, seventh Council of Carthage and Apost. Constt. (?) also use them. In the fourth century Eusebius throws doubt upon them; and Jerome subsequently (as his custom is in many things) reproduces what Eusebius said, but in his own work as an Editor of the Bible recognizes and admits the verses. The only adverse testimony which we really have therefore is that of Eusebius (if indeed he were not reproducing for the sake of discussion some earlier writer). Eusebius and S, with the halfhearted support of B, make a serious opposition to the genuineness of the verses; but they cannot overcome the solid mass of testimony in its favour. Olshausen (followed by Alford, &c.) supposes that in some old copy a leaf was torn off or lost; and, if Tischendorf be right in ascribing this part of S to the scribe who wrote B, we have an easy explanation of the testimony of these two MSS, as he would have that defective exemplar before him when making both copies. But apart from conjecture as to this, it may be admitted that Dean Burgon has justified his boast that "S. Mark's last Twelve Verses shall no longer remain a subject of dispute among men." (Dedication p. vi.) His book is a wonderful proof of concentrated industry.

Hieron. Dial. II. adv. Pelagianos, § 15. In quibusdam exemplaribus et maxime in Græcis codicibus, juxta Marcum in fine <sup>2</sup> Eusebius goes on to intimate that another man who could not take it upon him to reject what he finds in the Gospels, might admit both readings; and after some confusing (and, as it stands, confused) reasoning, he says in answer to a second question by Marinus that ὅψε σαββάτων in Matthew's narrative ought not to be understood as meaning the 'Evening of the Sabbath day,' but an advanced period of the following night; and he thus makes out the narrative of Matthew to be consistent with that of John, which says that Mary came on the first day of the week while it was yet dark. Mark is identical with John, and in his answer to Marinus's second question Eusebius gives an easy solution. Burgon suggests that in answer to the first question Eusebius was reporting the opinion of some one else.

<sup>3</sup> Burgon points out that the question and answer ascribed to Hedibia and Jerome are in fact translations of what passed between Eusebius and Marinus, so that we have not Jerome's own view in this passage. This is clear even in our extracts (see extract above from Euseb. ad Marin., with note). In revising the Old Latin version of the New Testament, Jerome allowed the verses to remain at the end of Mark's Gospel.

ejus Evangelii scribitur: "Postea quum accubuissent undecim, apparuit eis Jesus: et exprobravit incredulitatem et duritiam cordis eorum, quia his qui viderant eum resurgentem, non crediderunt: et illi satisfaciebant dicentes: Sacculum istud iniquitatis et incredulitatis substantia est, quae non sinit per immundos spiritus veram Dei apprehendi virtutem: idcirco jam nunc revela justitiam tuam."

C. 14. 1. Ναί. Ἀλλὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν ὁμοσεν τοῖς πατράσι δοῦναι τῷ λαῷ, εἰ δέδωκεν ζητῶμεν. (Luke i. 73.)

<sup>1</sup> That the author of the third Gospel was also the author of Acts may be regarded as certain. The tone and style, as well as the express claim (Acts i. 1), are accepted as decisive. Schleiermacher's breaking up of the whole narrative of the Gospel into its constituent parts has borne much fruit—not as regards this Gospel only—throughout this century, and his disciples are found in every land. But nothing more is proved than Luke's own preface implies. The Book is an avowed compilation of the testimonies of ministers and eyewitnesses. And, compilation though it be, there are marks of unity of authorship throughout. The phraseology of the two books is strikingly similar, and affords a demonstration that they are the work of a single author. On this Zeller (Acts, vol. II. p. 213, &c. Engl. Trans.) may answer Schleiermacher, whose Essay on St Luke is well known through Thirlwall's translation. (See also Schleiermacher, Einleitung, § 56 to § 79 and [for Acts] § 85 to § 90.) (See below, p. 159 note 1.) There is also an elaborate account of Luke's vocabulary in Holtzmann, Die synopt. Evang. § 19. 9. The physician, the man of culture, and the man acquainted with sea-faring, though not a sailor, is seen in both works. In regard to this last point see Smith (of Jordanhill), Dissertation on the Life and Writings of St Luke, prefixed to his 'Voyage and Shipwreck of St Paul' (1866). The first two chapters have been regarded by some as not genuine, but there can be no doubt that Justin Martyr knew them, and there seems to be an echo of them in Clement and Barnabas. Marcion's Gospel is now admitted to have been later than Luke, and to have been an adaptation of it, by mutilation. Though Tertullian's zeal leads him to charge Marcion with corruption in some passages where it is now clear that Marcion preserved the reading of older MSS of Luke than those in Tertullian's hand, the assurance of the African Apologist that Marcion's book was a mutilation of Luke is confirmed by recent investigations. The author of 'Supernatural Religion' stands out as a solitary opponent in the mean time; but he has a special regard for Marcion, whom he thinks "too able a man" (Sup. Rel. II. 125) to have done his work so imperfectly as to lay it open to the well-founded objections of Tertullian and others! This may be regarded as an expression of sympathy, but can scarcely be considered an argument.

That Luke was Paul's close companion we know from the writings of both. See below, notes on extracts from Irenaeus, Eusebius, and Jerome. That his Gospel represented teaching similar to that of St Paul, can scarcely be doubted; and, where they touch the same great subject, as in the account of the Lord's Supper, their words so closely correspond that the coincidence cannot be accidental. Irenaeus, Tertullian, and Origen all associate Paul with the Gospel of his friend and follower. But Luke's own Preface seems to be adequate reply to all such fond imaginings. It is hard to believe that if Luke had the direct authority of Paul for his narration, he would have failed to claim that authority in his preface. But it is equally hard to believe that a Gospel written by Luke in Paul's life-time should be published without the sanction of the great Apostle whose spirit it breathes, and whose very words it uses. We need not adopt the "Tendency" theory, as though the book were a conscious compromise between contending parties, or a fiction intended to teach Paulinism, when we agree with Hilgenfeld that we have in the Third Gospel an antidote to Judaism proper and to Judaizing Christianity, and a manifestation of the same truth of righteousness by faith and that faith the work of the Holy Spirit as Paul teaches. (Hilgenfeld, Die Evv., p. 220-223.)

<sup>2</sup> This is one of the many passages in 2 Clem. which may be referred to an apocryphal source; but it is perhaps sufficiently near to the words in Luke's Gospel to be cited in our text. Iren. II. 34. 3 has "si in modico fideles non fuistis, quod magnum est quis dabit vobis?"

<sup>1</sup> This apocryphal Gospel dates from about the middle of the second century. Origen refers to it by name. Clem. Alex. seems to refer to its narrative; and so does Justin Martyr. It contains c. 18 the statement of Christ's birth in a cave which fills so large a space in early legend and in Christian art. It has many internal marks of being a supplement to Luke's Gospel, written to counteract the statements of Ebionites and others regarding the ordinary humanity of Jesus Christ. See Tisch., Evang. Apocr., Proleg. p. XIII.

<sup>1</sup> In the following passages are expressions which show that Justin quoted Luke's Gospel. (See this admitted: Davidson, Introd. to N. T. II. 22.) The chief stress must however be laid on the incidents of our Lord's history—at the Birth and the Passion especially—which Justin has noticed, and which are peculiar to Luke. Some of the coincidences of expression are nevertheless striking, and the list of them in the text might perhaps have been increased by adding such as Apol. I. c. 15. p. 62 C, where Justin has Luke's εἰς μετάνοιαν (not genuine in the other Gospels); or Dial. c. 76. p. 301 D, where he has the ἐφάγομεν καὶ ἐπόμεν of Luke xiii. 26, along with the προσφητεύσαμεν of Mat. vii. 22; and Apol. I. c. 66. p. 98 B, where he has τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἀνάμνησίν μου (Luke xxii. 19, compare 1 Cor. xi. 25). In all these cases Justin's way of blending his various sources is strikingly seen.

<sup>1</sup> Origen does not commit himself to the identification of Lucius (Rom. xvi. 21) with the Evangelist Luke. Whether this Lucius was the same as he of Cyrene (Acts xiii. 1) is uncertain (see Meyer in loc.). But that Lucius of Cyrene is not the same as the Evangelist is clear, because the historian in the Acts does not use the first person (Acts xiii. 3) when speaking of actions in which Lucius took part. Lucas is more probably a contraction for Lucanus, and suggests that it was given to a native of Lucania, or southern Italy. (See after, note 1, under Eusebius.)

<sup>1</sup> The name Luke is probably, as we have seen, a contraction for Lucanus, or native of Lucania. It is quite possible, nevertheless, that the father of the Evangelist was a Lucanian, while he was himself from Antioch. That he was a physician makes it not improbable that he was a freedman or the son of a freedman, as those born in that position almost filled the medical ranks at the beginning of the Christian era. It is not impossible that he was educated in the Medical School at Tarsus, and, if so, his intimacy with St Paul is easily accounted for. But his intimate acquaintance with Antioch is seen in his giving so fully the names and details in connection with the church there. (Acts vi. 5; xi. 19; xx. 28; xiii. 1; xv. 1-3, 22-25.) He must have met there many who were scattered after the first persecution (Acts xi. 19). He went with Paul to Philippi, and it was his labours in that place which especially won for him Paul's panegyric in 2 Cor. viii. 18, 19. He seems at least to have remained in Philippi when Paul left, as the narrative changes from the first person (Acts xvi. 10) to the third (Acts xvii. 1). The second Ep. to the Corinthians is said to have been "written from Philippi by Titus and Lucas;" and although the report, which Eusebius preserves in the close of the extract, that Paul referred to the Gospel of Luke in 2 Tim. ii. 8, is not likely to be historical, the zeal of Luke in respect of his preaching of the Gospel, and the position which his character and culture had gained for him in many parts of Europe and Asia, marked him out as the Apostle's best colleague in the management of the collection for the poor saints. The constant references to Luke as a physician make it clear that he did not forget the exercise of his professional skill when he was a Christian Teacher. He ministered to Paul in his illnesses, and was with him to the last;—see Col. iv. 14; Philem. 24; 2 Tim. iv. 11. (See Plumptre's interesting and ingenious sketch in Introd. to St Luke in Commentary for English Readers.)

De vir. Ill. c. 7. Lucas medicus Antiochensis, ut ejus scripta indicant, Graeci sermonis non ignarus fuit, sectator apostoli Pauli, et omnis peregrinationis ejus comes. Scripsit Evangelium, de quo idem Paulus: "Missimus," inquit, "cum illo fratrem, cujus laus est in Evangelio per omnes ecclesias." (2 Cor. viii.) Et ad Colossenses: "Salutat vos Lucas medicus carissimus." Et ad Timotheum: "Lucas est mecum solus." Aliud quoque edidit volumen egregium, quod titulo Apostolicarum προαξέων prae-notatur, cujus historia usque ad biennium Romae commorantis Pauli pervenit, id est, usque ad quartum Neronis annum. Ex quo intelligimus, in eadem urbe librum esse compositum. . . . Quidam suspicantur, quotiescunque in epistolis suis Paulus dicit: "juxta Evangelium meum," de Lucae significare volumine: et Lucam non solum ab apostolo Paulo didicisse Evangelium, qui cum Domino in carne non fuerat, sed et a caeteris apostolis. Quod ipse quoque in principio sui voluminis declarat, dicens: "Sicut tradiderunt nobis, qui a principio ipsi viderunt, et ministri fuerunt sermonis." Igitur Evangelium sicut audierat, scripsit. Acta vero Apostolorum sicut viderat, composuit. Sepultus est Constantinopoli, ad quam urbem vicesimo Constantii anno, ossa ejus cum reliquiis Andreae apostoli translata sunt.

<sup>1</sup> Epiphanius, Haer. 51. 11, says Luke preached the Gospel in Dalmatia, Gallia, Italy, Macedonia, but first in Gallia; and founds upon the reading Gallia (for Galatia) in 2 Tim. iv. 10, which is also supported by  $\Sigma$  and C. If he accompanied Paul on his last journey into Spain, the tradition of his connection with Gaul may be so far well-founded. "Lucanus" the poet was a native of Spain. But all that regards Luke after Paul's death is uncertain; the conjectures of recent writers being too obviously baseless.

<sup>1</sup> Luke is much more likely to have written his Gospel in Cesarea during Paul's imprisonment there. The narrative of the Acts ends with the Roman imprisonment, i.e., about A.D. 63; and the Gospel is spoken of as an earlier treatise—apparently a considerable time earlier. The time A.D. 58-60 while Paul was in Cesarea is therefore probable. Luke's own diligent inquiries would be facilitated by his residing in Cesarea. His information regarding the Herodian family would be easily gained there. Compare Luke iii. 1; xiii. 32; xxiii. 5-12; Acts xii. 1-25; xxv. 13; xxvi. 32. Plumptre (see before, on Euseb. note 1) suggests that he owed it to Manaen (Acts xiii. 1); but this idea, while possible, seems unnecessary.

(Routh's Reliquiae Sacrae, I. 16.)

Maria mater Domini, Maria Cleophae, sive Alphei, uxor, quae fuit mater Jacobi episcopi et apostoli, et Symonis, et Thadei, et cujusdam Joseph; Maria Salome, uxor Zebedei, mater Joannis evangelistae, et Jacobi (compare Mat. xxvii. 5, 6; Mark xv. 40 and xvi. 1); Maria Magdalena. Istaе quatuor in evangelio reperiuntur. . . . Maria Jacobi minoris, et Joseph, mater, uxor Alphei, soror fuit Mariae matris Domini, quam Cleophae Joannes nominat (John xix. 25) vel a patre, vel a gentilitatis familia, vel alia causa.

[Note. This is taken from a MS of the fourteenth century, and is not by the Apostolic Papias, but by a Latin lexicographer of the same name in the eleventh century.]

Evangelium johannis manifestatum et datum est ecclesiis ab johanne adhuc in corpore constituto, sicut papias nomine hierapolitanus discipulus johannis carus in exotericis [exegeticis], id est in extremis, quinque libris retulit. Disscripsit vero evangelium dictante johanne recte; verum Martion haereticus cum ab eo fuisset improbatus eo quod contraria sentiebat, abjectus est a johanne. Is vero scripta vel epistolas ad eum pertulerat a fratribus qui in Ponto fuerunt.

[Note.—The MS is ascribed to the ninth century, but the prefatory note is old, older than Jerome, in Tischendorf's opinion. The passage seems to be made up of detached notices. The account of Marcion is an anachronism. Disscripsit vero evangelium is supposed to have been a translation of ὁ ἀπé-γραφον ἀπὸ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, ἀπéγραφον being third person plural, but mistaken by some later writer for the first person singular, so as to make Papias himself the amanuensis. (See Lightfoot, Contemp. Review, October 1875, p. 854.)]

σοῦς, οὐκ ἦλθεν ἐν κόμπῳ ἀλαζονείας οὐδὲ ὑπερηφανίας, καίπερ δυνάμενος, ἀλλὰ ταπεινοφρονῶν, καθὼς τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον περὶ αὐτοῦ ἐλάλησεν: φησὶν γάρ· κ.τ.λ.
Then follows a quotation of Isaiah liii. 1-12. In these words Jerome seems to quote Clement from memory, and then to run into another quotation of his own from the Gospel.

Πόθεν, φησὶ, γέγονε τὸ φῶς; ἐξ οὐδενός· οὐ γὰρ γέγραπται, φησὶ, πόθεν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ μόνον ἐκ τῆς φωνῆς τοῦ λέγοντος, ὁ δὲ λέγων, φησὶν, οὐκ ἦν, οὐδὲ τὸ γενόμενον ἦν. Γέγονε, φησὶν, ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων τὸ σπέρμα τοῦ κόσμου, ὁ λόγος ὁ λεχθείς· γενήθ' ἡμεῖς φῶς, καὶ τοῦτο, φησὶν, ἔστι τὸ λεγόμενον ἐν τοῖς εὐαγγελίοις· Ἦν τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινόν, ὃ φωτίζει πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον. Λαμβάνει τὰς ἀρχὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ σπέρματος ἐκείνου καὶ φωτίζεται. (John i. 9.)

C. 6. Ὁ δὲ Ἰουδαῖος ἔφη· Ἐγὼ τριάκοντα ὀκτὼ ἔτι ἐν κλίνῃ κατεκείμεν ἐν ὁδῷ πόνων. . . . Καὶ ἰδὼν με ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐσπλαγχνίσθη καὶ λόγον εἶπέν μοι· Ἀρὸν σου τὸν κράββατον καὶ πε-

ριπάται. Καὶ ἴδρα τὸν κράββατόν μου καὶ περιεπάτησα . . . ἐν σαββάτῳ. (Compare John v. 2.)

[Note.—Justin twice quotes a work to which he gives this name. Thus he says, after quoting some incidents of the crucifixion of Jesus, Apol. I. c. 35. p. 76 C.: Καὶ ταῦτα ὅτι γέγονε, δύνασθε μαθεῖν ἐκ τῶν ἐπὶ Ποντίου Πιλάτου γενομένων Ἐκτῶν. And so also in nearly the same words, Apol. I. c. 48, p. 84 C. Compare also a more general reference, Apol. I. c. 38, p. 77 B. So also Tertullian (Apologet. c. 21), after recounting the incidents of the Death and Burial and Resurrection of Jesus, says: Ea omnia super Christo Pilatus, et ipse jam pro sua conscientia Christianus, Caesari tunc Tiberio nuntiavit. See Tisch., Evangelia Apocrypha, Proleg. p. LXII, &c., for a full discussion of the age of the Christian document known as the “Acts of Pilate.” Although interpolated at a later time, and although it is very unlike what an official report of the procurator to the Emperor would have been, it seems to be of very old date, and, as part of the so-called “Gospel of Nicodemus,” is well known. If the book we now have is substantially that which Justin referred to, believing it to be a standard document, it is valuable evidence for the previous existence of the Gospel of John, on which it is largely based. See, e.g., chapter iii. Tisch., Ev. Apoc., p. 218. Its title in the MSS is not Ἄκτα, as in Justin, but Ὑπομνήματα. Eusebius (II. E. II. 2) and Epiphanius (Haer. L. 1) testify to the existence of such a book; and the Emperor Maximin caused a heathen and anti-christian book under the same title to be widely circulated, and even to be committed to memory by boys at school.]

<sup>1</sup> This passage was mentioned in a note under "The Apostolical Fathers and the Synoptists." It is given here as an example of Hermas's relation to St John. Many passages in John are suggested by it. The ἐντολαί suggest many passages in chapters xii.-xvii.; 1 John ii. 3, &c. But the whole of the suggestions are provoking rather than satisfactory, when words and phrases are considered; they come much closer when their theology is studied. The dignity, mission, and sufferings of God's Son are prominent in Hermas's teaching, and remind us of the Fourth Gospel at every turn. Compare also the following extract, and compare John xv. with Sim. VIII.

<sup>1</sup> There are several passages in Justin which may be referred to the Prologue of John's Gospel. They seem to show that Justin's theology was grounded upon John. The use of μονογενής in connection with the mention of the "Memoirs" is interesting, and looks as if the Fourth Gospel were included. See Dial. c. 105, p. 332 C. below. It is certain that Justin knew the Apocalypse (Dial. c. 81), but he does not quote Apoc. xix. 13, in which it is said, "His name shall be called the λόγος of God."

<sup>2</sup> Justin is arguing for the fulfilment of the prophecy of Isaiah; and it is suggested (see Drummond in Theol. Rev., July 1877) that he quotes the words of the Gospel, changing ἐκάθισεν into ἐκάθισαν, and making it transitive. In c. 32 Justin adds to the Synoptic account of Christ riding on an ass the statement that it was bound to a vine, so as to connect it with Gen. xlix. 11; and it is supposed that he similarly adds χρόνον ἡμῶν to the Johannine narrative, in order to connect it with Isaiah's αἰτοῦσέ με νῦν κρίσιν. See Hilg., Die Evang. Justins, p. 224.

<sup>3</sup> The preceding words refer to Baptism in the name of the Trinity (as in Matthew's Gospel). The Gospel of Matthew is thus joined with that of John. [Note. In an able article in the 'Theological Review' (April 1877), Professor Drummond shows that Justin cannot have been ignorant of the Fourth Gospel, because of his use of the word λόγος. He uses it in its special theological sense 27 times out of 67 in Apol. I.; 16 out of 28 in Apol. II.; 7 out of 235 in the Dialogue. Christ or the λόγος is called Θεός once in the Apology, and "a great number of times (I have counted upwards of 34) in the Dialogue."

<sup>5</sup> Justin's usual word for Christ is πρωτότοκος. Thus Apol. I. c. 46. p. 83 says τὸν Χριστὸν πρωτότοκον τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι ἐδιδάχθημεν. There are attempts (see Hilg., Die Evang. Justins, p. 301) to show that the use of μονογενὴς here is from Psalm xxii. 21. It is true that Justin was dealing with that Psalm in the passage immediately before, but it must be remembered that the reference in our quotation is not to the Psalm, but to the Memoirs.

Those who try to make out that Justin describes the Logos as springing from God, in the first instance, at the creation of the world, while John makes the Logos earlier, do not attach due weight to the following: Justin says, the Son is πρωτότοκος to the unbegotten God, Apol. I. 53-63; and again Apol. II. 6 says, the Logos was with God begotten before all His works; also calls Him γέννημα before the creation πάντων τῶν ποιημάτων; and calls Christ also ὁ Θεός, Dial. c. 56, 75. Though Justin's doctrine savoured more of the Alexandrian theosophy than John's, it was substantially the same. John, Colossians, and Justin are at one. We may add that Justin speaks of the Holy Spirit in connection with His functions of conferring prophetic and other spiritual gifts. His aim was to establish Christ's Divinity; and he does not set himself to speak of the Holy Spirit's Divine Personality. But he does not speak of Him as an offspring or emanation. See Donaldson's Christian Literature and Doctrine, II. 264.

The following additional passages may be regarded as "echoes" of the Fourth Gospel. The list might be increased, but these seem the most important:—

B. V. 36. 1, 2. Ὡς οἱ πρεσβύτεροι λέγουσι, τότε καὶ οἱ μὲν καταξιοθέντες ἡς ἐν οὐρανῷ διατριβῆς, ἐκεῖσε χωρήσουσιν . . . οἱ δὲ τῇ πόλει κατοικήσουσιν· Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο εἰρηζέται τὸν Κτίριον· Ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς μου μονᾶς εἶναι πολλὰς· (John xiv. 2.)

Omnia igitur talia circumscribere volens discipulus Domini, et regulam veritatis constituere in Ecclesia, quia est unus Deus omnipotens, qui per Verbum suum omnia fecit, et visibilia et invisibilia; significans quoque, quoniam per Verbum, per quod Deus perfecit conditionem, in hoc et salutem his qui in conditione sunt praestitit hominibus; sic inchoavit in ea quae est secundum Evangelium doctrina: "In principio erat Verbum."

27. JEROME.

Epist. II. ad Paulinum. (See before, p. 21.)

Comment. in Matth. Argum. (See before, p. 100.)

Catal. script. eccl. c. 9. Joannes Apostolus, quem Jesus amavit plurimum, filius Zebedaei, frater Jacobi apostoli, quem Herodes post passionem Domini decollaverat, novissimus omnium scripsit Evangelium, rogatus ab Asiae episcopis, adversus Cerinthum, aliosque haereticos, et maxime tunc Ebionitarum dogma consurgens, quiasserunt Christum ante Mariam non fuisse. Unde et compulsus est divinam ejus nativitatem edicere. Sed et aliam causam hujus scripturae ferunt: quod cum legisset Matthaei, Marci et Lucae volumina, probaverit quidem textum historiae, et vera eos dixisse firmaverit; sed unius tantum anni, in quo et passus est, post carcerem Joannis, historiam texuisse. Praetermisso itaque anno, cujus acta a tribus exposita fuerant, superioris temporis antequam Joannes clauderetur in carcerem, gesta narravit, sicut manifestum esse poterit his qui diligenter quatuor Evangeliorum volumina legerint. Quae res etiam διαφορίαν, quae videtur Joannis esse cum caeteris, tollit.

Scripsit autem et unam epistolam, cujus exordium est: "quod fuit ab initio, quod audivimus et vidimus oculis nostris, quod perspeximus, et manus nostrae contrectaverunt, de verbo vitae;" quae ab universis ecclesiasticis et eruditis viris probatur. Reliquae autem duae, quarum principium est: "Senior electae dominae et natis ejus;" et sequentis: "Senior Cajo carissimo, quem ego diligo in veritate," Joannis Presbyteri asseruntur, cujus et hodie alterum sepulcrum apud Ephesum ostenditur; etsi nonnulli putant duas memorias ejusdem Joannis evangelistae esse, super qua re quum per ordinem ad Papiam auditorem ejus ventum fuerit, disseremus. Quarto decimo igitur anno, secundam post Neronem persecutionem movente Domitiano, in Patmos insulam relegatus, scripsit Apocalypsin, quam interpretatur Justinus Martyr et Irenaeus. Interfecto autem Domitiano, et actis ejus ob nimiam crudelitatem a senatu rescissis, sub Nerva principe redit Ephesum: ibique usque ad Trajanum principem perseverans, totas Asiae fundavit rexitque ecclesias: et confectus senio, sexagesimo octavo post passionem Domini anno mortuus, juxta eandem urbem sepultus est.

Adv. Jovinianum I. 26. Joannes unus ex discipulis, qui minimus traditur fuisse inter apostolos, et quem fides Christi virginem repererat, virgo permansit. . . . Ut autem sciamus, Joannem tunc fuisse puerum, manifestissime docent ecclesiasticae historiae, quod usque ad Trajani vixerit imperium, i.e. post passionem Domini sexagesimo octavo anno dormierit.

Comment. in Dan. c. 9. Tradentibus ecclesiasticis historiis Joannem evangelistam usque ad tempora vixisse Trajani.

TO TESTIMONIES TO JOHN'S GOSPEL.

THE PASCHAL CONTROVERSY IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

Reference is usually made to the following passages in modern discussions regarding John's Gospel. The ancient controversy (see the opening sentence below from Eusebius) was as to the propriety of the Churches in Asia Minor closing their Fast on the 14th day of the month at Easter. John's authority was claimed for this practice. The modern controversy is on the question whether the practice is reconcileable with John's Gospel which seems to date the crucifixion of Christ on the 14th. See Introduction.

1. EUSEBIUS.

EUSEBIUS, in his History of the Church (V. 22), gives a list of the bishops who held office in the tenth year of the reign of Commodus. He names Victor Bishop of Rome, Demetrius of Alexandria, Serapion of Antioch, Theophilus of Caesarea, Narcissus of Jerusalem, Bacchyllus of Corinth, and Polycrates of Ephesus. He adds that he has only recounted the names of the orthodox. He goes on to say:—

Eus. H. E. V. 23. Ζητήσεως δὴτα κατὰ τοῦσδε οὐ μικρὰς ἀνακινήσεις, ὅτι δι' τῆς Ἀσίας ἀπάσης αἱ παροικίαι, ὡς ἂν ἐκ παραδόσεως ἀρχαιότερας, σελήνης τὴν τεσσαρεσκαδεκάτην ᾗοντο δεῖν ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ σωτηρίου πάσχα ἑορτῆς παραγυλάττειν, ἐν ᾗ θύειν τὸ πρόβατον Ἰουδαίοις προηγόρευτο· ὡς δέον ἐκπαντὸς κατὰ ταύτην, ὅποίε δ' ἂν ἡμέρα τῆς ἑβδομάδος περιτεγχνάνοι, τὰς τῶν ἀσιτιῶν ἐπιλέσεις ποιῆσθαι, οὐκ ἔθους ὄντος τοῦτον ἐπιτελεῖν τὸν τρόπον ταῖς ἀνὰ τὴν λοιπὴν ἅπασαν οἰκουμένην ἐκ-

C. 24. Τῶν δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς Ἀσίας ἐπισκόπων, τὸ πάλαι πρότερον αὐτοῖς παραδοθὲν διαφελάτειν ἔθος χρῆναι δυσχερῆζομένων, ἤγειτο Πολυκράτης· ὃς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν ἧ' πρὸς Βίκτορα καὶ τὴν Ῥωμαίων ἐκκλησίαν διετυπόσατο γραφῇ, τὴν εἰς αὐτὸν ἐλθοῦσαν παράδοσιν ἐκτίθεται διὰ τούτων· “Ἡμεῖς οὖν ἀραδιοῦργητον ἄγομεν τὴν ἡμέραν, μίτε προστιθέντες, μίτε ἀφαιρούμενοι. Καὶ γὰρ κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν μεγάλα στοιχεῖα κεκοίμῃται, ἅπανα ἀναστήσεται τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ Κυρίου, ἐν ἧ' ἔρχεται μετὰ δόξης ἐξ οὐρανῶν, καὶ ἀναστήσει πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, Φίλιππον τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων, ὃς κεκοίμῃται ἐν Ἱερουσόλῃς, καὶ δύο θυγατέρες αὐτοῦ γενηρακῆται παρθένοι. Καὶ ἡ ἑτέρα αὐτοῦ θυγάτηρ ἐν Ἀγίῳ Πνεύματι πολιτευσαιμένη ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἀναπαύεται· ἔτι δὲ καὶ Ἰωάννης ὁ ἐπὶ τὸ στήθος τοῦ Κυρίου ἀναπεσὼν, ὃς ἐγενήθη ἱερεὺς τὸ πέταλον λεφορευῶς, καὶ μάρτυς καὶ διδάσκαλος· οὗτος ἐν Ἐφέσῳ κεκοίμῃται.” [Then he enumerates those who agreed—Polycarp, Thraseas, Sagaris, Papirius, Melito the Eunuch—and adds:—] “Οἱτοι πάντες ἐτίθησαν τὴν ἡμέραν τῆς τεσσαρεσκαί-

δεκάτης τοῦ πάσχα κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον,<sup>1</sup> μηδὲν παρεκβαίνοντες, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν κανόνα τῆς πίστεως ἀκολουθοῦντες. Ὅτι δὲ καὶ γὰρ ὁ μικρότερος πάντων ἡμῶν Πολυκράτης, κατὰ παράδοσιν τῶν συγγενῶν μου, οἷς καὶ παροχολούθησα τισὶν αὐτῶν· ἑπτὰ μὲν ἴσων συγγενεῖς μου ἐπίσκοποι, ἐγὼ δὲ ὁγδοὺς· καὶ πάντοτε τὴν ἡμέραν ἤγαγον οἱ συγγενεῖς μου, ὅταν ὁ λαὸς ἦρνε τὴν ζύμην. . . .”

Upon this Victor, Bishop of the Church of Rome, endeavoured to cut off the churches of all Asia from the common unity, as being heterodox. But other bishops resisted him.

Ἐν οἷς καὶ ὁ Εἰρηναῖος ἐκ προσώπου ὧν ἡγεῖτο κατὰ τὴν Γαλλίαν ἀδελφῶν ἐπιστεῖλας, παρίσταται μὲν τῷ δεῖν ἐν μόνῃ τῇ τῆς κυριακῆς ἡμέρᾳ τὸ εἶναι τοῦ Κυρίου ἀναστάσεως ἐπιτελεῖσθαι μυστήριον· τῷ γὰρ μὴν Βίβλασι προσκηλόντως, ὥς μὴ ἀποκόπτοι ὅλας ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ, ἀρχαίον ἔθους παράδοσιν ἐπιτηροῦσας, πλεῖστα ἔτερα μαρτυρεῖ, καὶ αὐτοῖς δὲ ὁμίμασι τάδε ἐπιλέγων· “Οὐδὲ γὰρ μόνον περὶ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐστὶν ἡ ἐμφισβήτησις, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τοῦ εἶδους αὐτοῦ τῆς νηστείας. C. 25. Irenaeus wrote letters also to other bishops on the question. The bishops of Palestine state that they kept the custom handed down to them by succession from the Apostles; and that the Christians of Alexandria observed the same day as they themselves did.

In another passage (IV. 26) Eusebius says that Melito Bishop of Sardis (A.D. 175) wrote a work on the Passover, beginning thus:—“Ἐπὶ Σερονιλλίου Παύλου ἀνθυπάτου τῆς Ἀσίας, ᾧ Σάγαρις καιρῷ ἐμαρτίρῃσεν, ἐγένετο ζήτησις πολλὴ ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ περὶ τοῦ πάσχα, ἐμπεσόντος καιρὸς ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις . . .” Τοῦτου δὲ λόγου μέμνηται Κλήμης ὁ Ἀλεξανδρεὺς ἐν ἰδίῳ περὶ τοῦ πάσχα λόγῳ, ὃν ὡς ἐξ αἰτίας τῆς τοῦ Μελίτωνος γραφῆς φησὶν ἑαυτὸν συντάξει.

3. THE PASCHAL CHRONICLE.<sup>5</sup>

Ἐν αὐτῇ οὖν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ἐν ᾗ ἡμελλον οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι πρὸς ἐσπέραν ἐσθίειν τὸ πάσχα, ἐσταυρώθη ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν καὶ σωτὴρ ὁ Χριστός, θῆμα γενόμενος τοῖς μέλλουσι μεταλήψεσθαι τῆς πίστεως τοῦ κατ' αὐτὸν μυστηρίου κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον τῷ μακαρίῳ Παύλῳ, “καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα ἡμῶν ἐστὶ ἡμῶν ἐτίθι Χριστός,” καὶ οὐχ ὥς τινες ἀμαθῆς φερόμενοι διαβεβαιούντια ὥς φαρῶν τὸ πάσχα παρεδόθη· ὅπερ οὔτε παρὰ τῶν ἁγίων εὐαγγελίων μεμαθήκαμεν οὔτε τις τῶν μακαρίων ἡμῶν ἀποστόλων τι τοιοῦτον παραδίδωκεν. . . .—Chron. Pasch. P. 5, B. C.

Having repeated that Christ, being slain as the true Paschal Lamb on the 14th, could not have eaten the legal Passover before He suffered, the chronicler goes on to cite testimonies.

<sup>5</sup> This is a Paschal computation (σύνταγμα περὶ τοῦ πάσχα or πασχάλιον), i.e. a rule for the celebration of the Passover. Such tables or calendars were not uncommon; and we read of one made by Hippolytus for a period of 16 years. The Festal letters of Athanasius (see before, page 13 and note 1) are instances of the pains that were taken about such subjects. The ‘Paschal chronicle’ with which we have here to do contains this tabular computation and also a Preface, long and mystical and of uncertain date. This Preface repeats over and over again that Jesus Christ, being the True Passover, was slain on the day when the Jews usually slew their passover viz. the fourteenth. The inference the author draws is that Christ could not have eaten the legal passover before he suffered. He quotes several early authors as testifying in his favour. From these the passages in our text are taken. The Paschal Chronicle (sometimes called Sicilian, because the MS was found in Sicily; sometimes the Alexandrian, because it was at first supposed to be written by Peter of Alexandria) seems to be of old date; but its oldest MS is of the tenth century. The Preface may be of about the seventh century. The Preface is therefore of late date and it is also anonymous. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, great stress has been laid upon it.

μὲν οὖν ὅτι φιλονεικίας τὸ ἔργον. Λέγει<sup>7</sup> γὰρ οὕτως· ἐποίησε τὸ πάσχα ὁ Χριστὸς τότε τῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἔπαθεν· διὸ καὶ δεῖ ὃν τρόπον ὁ Κύριος ἐποίησεν, οὕτω ποιεῖν. Περὶ πάντων δὲ μὴ γινώσκων ὅτι ὃ καιρὸν ἔπασχεν ὁ Χριστὸς οὐκ ἔφαγε τὸ κατὰ νόμον πάσχα. Οὗτος γὰρ ἦν τὸ πάσχα τὸ προεκεκρυγμένον καὶ τὸ τελειούμενον τῇ ὁρισμένῃ ἡμέρᾳ.—P. 6, A. B.

Another short extract from Hippolytus "περὶ τοῦ ἁγίου πάσχα," says: 'Ὁ πάλαι προειπὼν ὅτι Οὐδέτι φάγομαι τὸ πάσχα εἰκότως τὸ μὲν δεῖπνον ἐδείπνησεν πρὸ τοῦ πάσχα, τὸ δὲ πάσχα οὐκ ἔφαγεν, ἀλλ' ἔπαθεν.<sup>8</sup> Οὐδὲ γὰρ καιρὸς ἦν τῆς βρώσεως αὐτοῦ.

Καὶ Ἀπολλινάριος (A.D. 170) δὲ ὁ ὁσιώτατος ἐπίσκοπος Ἱερουσαλὲως τῆς Ἀσίας, ὁ ἐγγὺς τῶν ἀποστολικῶν χρόνων γεγονώς, ἐν τῇ περὶ τοῦ πάσχα λόγῳ τὰ παραπλήσια ἐδίδαξε, λέγων οὕτως· Εἰσὶ τοίνυν οἱ δι' ἄγνοιαν φιλονεικοῦσι περὶ τούτων, συγγνωστὸν πρῶτον πεπονηότες· ἄγνοια γὰρ οὐ κατηγορίαν ἀναδέχεται ἀλλὰ διδαχῆς προσδεῖται· καὶ λέγουσιν ὅτι τῇ ιδ' τὸ πρόβατον μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν ἔφαγεν ὁ Κύριος, τῇ δὲ μεγάλῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν ἀζύμων αὐτὸς ἔπαθεν, καὶ διηγούμενα Ματθαῖον οὕτω λέγειν ὡς νεοφύλασιν· ὅθεν ἀσύμμελός τε νόμος ἢ νόμις αὐτῶν, καὶ στασιάζειν δοκεῖ κατ' αὐτοὺς τὰ εὐαγγέλια.<sup>9</sup>

Καὶ πάλιν ὁ αὐτὸς ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ λόγῳ γέγραπεν οὕτως· Ἡ ιδ' τὸ ἀληθινὸν τοῦ Κυρίου πάσχα, ἡ θυσία ἡ μεγάλη, ὁ ὦν τοῦ ἁγίου πατρὸς Θεοῦ, ὁ δεθεῖς, ὁ δῆσας τὸν ἰσχυρὸν, καὶ ὁ κριθεὶς κρίτης ζώωντων καὶ νεκρῶν, καὶ ὁ παραδοθεὶς εἰς χεῖρας ἁμαρτωλῶν, ἵνα σταυρωθῇ, ὁ ὑψωθεὶς ἐπὶ κροτάτων μονοζέρωτος, καὶ ὁ τὴν ἁγίαν πλευρὰν ἐκκεντηθεὶς, ὁ ἐκχέας ἐκ τῆς πλευρᾶς αὐτοῦ τὰ δύο πάλιν καθάρσια, ὕδωρ καὶ αἷμα, λόγον καὶ πνεῦμα, καὶ ὁ ταφεὶς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τοῦ πάσχα, ἐπιτεθέντος τῷ μνήματι τοῦ λίθου.

Next, Clement of Alexandria is cited as teaching to the same effect ἐν τῇ περὶ τοῦ πάσχα λόγῳ, thus: Τοῖς μὲν οὖν παρεληλυθόσιν ἔτεσι τὸ θνύμενον πρὸς Ἰουδαίων ἡσθιεν ἐφορτάζων ὁ

Κύριος πάσχα· ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐκίρυσεν αὐτὸς ὢν τὸ πάσχα, ὁ ἀντὶς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὡς προΐβαιον ἐπὶ σημεῖον ἀγόμενος, αὐτίκα ἐδίδαξε μὲν τοὺς μαθητὰς τοῦ τύπου τὸ μυστήριον τῇ γ', ἐν ἣ καὶ πενθάρονται αὐτοῦ, Ποῦ θέλεις ἐτοιμάσωμέν σοι τὸ πάσχα φαγεῖν; Ταύτη οὖν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ὁ ἀγιασμός τῶν ἁγίων καὶ ἡ προετοιμασία τῆς ἑορτῆς ἐγίνετο. Ὅθεν ὁ Ἰωάννης ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ εὐχολογῶν ὡς ἂν προετοιμαζομένους ἦδι, ἀπονύψασθαι τὸς λόδας πρὸς τοῦ Κυρίου τοὺς μαθητὰς ἀναγράφει· πέπονθεν δὲ τῇ ἐπιούσῃ ὁ Σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, αὐτὸς ὢν τὸ πάσχα, καλλιμεριθεὶς ἐπὶ Ἰουδαίων. Καὶ μεθ' ἑτερα, ἀκολούθως ἄρα τῇ ιδ', ὅτε καὶ ἔπαθεν, ἔωθεν αὐτὸν οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς τῷ Πιλάτῳ προσαγαγόντες οὗκ εἰσέλθον εἰς τὸ πραιτώριον ἵνα μὴ μιανθῶσιν, ἀλλ' ἀκολούτως ἐσπέρως τὸ πάσχα φαγῶσι, ταύτῃ τῶν ἡμερῶν τῇ ἀκριβείᾳ καὶ αἱ γραφαὶ πᾶσαι συμφωνοῦσι καὶ τὰ εὐαγγέλια συνομό. Ἐπιμαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀνάστασις· τῇ γοῦν τρίτῃ ἀνέστη ἡμέρᾳ ἣτις ἦν πρώτη τῶν ἑβδομάδων τοῦ θρητισμοῦ, ἐν ἣ καὶ τὸ δράγμα νενομοθέτητο προσεφεγεῖν τὸν ἱερέα.

4. EPIPHANIUS.

Epiphanius (Haeresies) treating of the Quartodecimans, says, ἑλίας γὰρ τοῦ ἔτους μίαν ἡμέραν τοῦ πάσχα οἱ τοιοῦτοι φιλονεικῶς ἄγονσι.

Again: κεχηρμένοι τῷ ὅρτῳ, ὃ εἶπεν ὁ νόμος· ὅτι ἐπικατάρατος ὅς οὐ ποιήσει τὸ πάσχα τῇ τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ μηνός.

He says there was much dispute amongst the Quartodecimans as to the day for the Passover; and that the Acts of Pilate were cited as authority for the viii Kal. Apr. being the day of our Saviour's Passion. He adds that he has seen copies of the Acts of Pilate making the xv Kal. Apr. the date.

Again he says: ἔδει γὰρ τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ θύεσθαι κατὰ τὸν νόμον.

He closes with an argument in favour of the usage of the Catholic Church, which observes also the seventh day, and says: κέχρηται γὰρ οὐ μόνον τῇ τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῃ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῇ ἑβδομάτῃ καὶ τῇ κατὰ περίοδον ἀνακινουμένῃ, ἵαζει τῶν τοῦ Σαββάτου ἑπτὰ ἡμερῶν. . . .

C. 16. Ὁ δὲ ἀνθρώπαιος ἔστησεν τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκάλεσεν τὸν Παῦλον λέγων· Τίς εἶ, καὶ τί διδάσκεις; οὐ γὰρ μισθῶς σοι κατηγοροῦσιν. Καὶ ἤρεν τὴν φωνὴν αὐτοῦ ὁ Παῦλος λέγων· Εἰ ἐγὼ σήμερον ἀνακρίνομαι τί διδάσκω, ἄκουσον, ἀνθρώπατε. Θεὸς ζῶν, Θεὸς ἐκδιζήσιων, Θεὸς ἡλιωτὺς, Θεὸς ἀπροσδεὴς, χορῶν τῆς τῶν ἀνθρώπων σωτηρίας ἔπεμψέν με ὅπως ἀπὸ τῆς φθορᾶς καὶ τῆς ἀκαθαρσίας ἀποσπάσω αὐτοὺς καὶ πάσης ἡδονῆς καὶ θανάτου, ὅπως μὴ ἐμάρτωσιν· διὸ ἔπεμψεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ παῖδα, ὃν ἐγὼ εὐαγγελίζομαι καὶ διδάσκω ἐν ἐκείνῳ ἔχειν τὴν ἐλπίδα τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ὃς μόνος συνεπάδησεν πλανομένῳ κόσμῳ, ἵνα μηκέτι ἐπὶ κρίσιν ᾧσιν, ἀνθρώπατε, ἀλλὰ πίστιν ἔχωσιν καὶ φόβον Θεοῦ καὶ γνώσιν σεμνότητος καὶ ἀγάπην ἀληθείας. Εἰ οὖν ἐγὼ τὰ ἐπὶ Θεοῦ μοι ἀνακεκαλυμμένα διδάσκω, τί ἀδικῶ; Ὁ δὲ ἀνθρώπαιος ἀκούσας ἐκέλευσεν δεθῆναι τὸν Παῦλον καὶ εἰς φρελακὴν ἀποκατασταθῆναι, μέχρις οὗ εὐσκολήσας, φρεσὶν ἀκούσομαι αὐτοῦ ἐπιμελέστερον. <sup>1</sup> “Acts of Paul and Thecla,” a work of the second century, containing accounts of Paul’s labours, which Tertullian (de bapt. c. 17) says was written by a presbyter who confessed that he manufactured it from love of Paul. According to Jerome it dates from the beginning of the second century.

B. III. 14. § 1. Quoniam autem is Lucas inseparabilis fuit a Paulo, et cooperarius ejus in Evangelio, ipse facit manifestum, non glorians, sed ab ipsa productus veritate. Separatis enim, inquit, a Paulo, et Barnaba et Joanne, qui vocabatur Marcus, et cum navigassent Cyprum, "nos venimus in Troadem:" et cum vidisset Paulus per somnium virum Macedonem, dicentem; "Veniens in Macedoniam opitulare nobis, Paule;" statim, ait: "quaesivimus proficisci in Macedoniam, intelligentes quoniam provocavit nos Dominus evangelizare eis. Navigantes igitur a Troade, direximus navigium in Samothracen:" et deinceps reliquum omnem ipsorum usque ad Philippos adventum diligenter significat, et quemadmodum primum sermonem loquuti sunt: "Sedentes enim," inquit, "loquuti sumus mulieribus quae convenerant;" et quinam crediderunt, et quam multi. Et iterum ait: "Nos autem navigavimus post dies azymorum a Philippis, et venimus Troadem, ubi et commorati sumus diebus septem." Et reliqua omnia ex ordine cum Paulo refert, omni diligentia demonstrans et loca et civitates et quantitatem dierum, quoadusque Hierosolymam ascenderent: et quae illic contigerint Paulo, quemadmodum vincetus Romam missus est, et nomen centurionis qui suscepit eum, et parasema navium, et quemadmodum naufragium fecerunt, et in qua liberati sunt insula, et quemadmodum humanitatem ibi perceperunt, Paulo curante principem ipsius insulae, et quemadmodum inde Putcolos navigaverunt, et inde Romam pervenerunt, et quanto tempore Romae commorati sunt. Omnibus his cum adesset Lucas, diligenter conscripsit ea, uti neque mendax, neque elatus deprehendi possit, eo quod omnia haec constarent, et seniore eum esse omnibus qui nunc aliud docent, neque ignorare veritatem. Quoniam non solum prosequutor, sed et cooperarius fuerit apostolorum, maxime autem Pauli, et ipse autem Paulus manifestavit in epistolis, dicens: "Demas me dereliquit, et abiit Thessalonicam, Crescens in Galatiam, Titus in Dalmatiam: Lucas est mecum solus." Unde ostendit quod semper junctus ei et inseparabilis fuerit ab eo. Et iterum in ea epistola quae est ad Colossenses, ait: "Salutat vos Lucas medicus di-lectus." Si autem Lucas quidem, qui semper cum Paulo prae-dicavit, et dilectus ab eo est dictus, et cum eo evangelizavit, et creditus est referre nobis Evangelium, nihil aliud ab eo didicit, sicut ex verbis ejus ostensum est, quemadmodum hi qui nunquam Paulo adjuncti fuerunt, gloriantur abscondita et inenarrabilia didicisse sacramenta? -- Quoniam autem Paulus simpliciter quae sciebat, haec et docuit, non solum eos qui cum eo erant, verum omnes audientes se, ipse facit manifestum. In Mileto enim convocatis episcopis et presbyteris, qui erant ab Epheso, et a reliquis proximis civitatibus, quoniam ipse festinaret Hierosolymis Pentecosten agere, multa testificatus eis, et dicens quae oportet ei Hierosolymis evenire, adjecit: "Scio quoniam jam non videbitis faciem meam etc." . . . Deinde significans futuros malos doctores, dixit: "Ego scio quoniam advenient post disces-sum meum lupi graves ad vos, non parcentes gregi etc." . . . Sic apostoli simpliciter, et nemini invidentes, quae didicerant ipsi a Domino, haec omnibus tradebant. Sic igitur et Lucas nemini invidens, ea quae ab eis didicerat, tradidit nobis, sicut ipse testificatur dicens: "Quemadmodum tradiderunt nobis qui ab initio contemplatores et ministri fuerunt verbi."

B. III. 15. § 1. Eadem autem dicimus iterum et his, qui Paulum apostolum non cognoscunt, quoniam aut reliquis verbis Evangelii, quae per solum Lucam in nostram venerunt agnitionem, renuntiare debent, et non uti eis; aut si illa recipiunt omnia, habent necessitatem recipere etiam eam testificationem, quae est de Paulo, dicente ipso, primum quidem Dominum ei de coelo locutum: "Saul, Saul, quid me persequeris? Ego sum Jesus Christus, quem tu persequeris:" deinde Ananiae, de eo dicente: "Vade, quoniam vas electionis mihi est iste, ut portet nomen meum in gentibus, et regibus, et filiis Israel. Ego enim demonstrabo ei ex ipso, quanta oporteat eum pati propter nomen meum." Qui igitur non recipiunt eum qui sit electus a Deo ad hoc, ut fiducialiter portet nomen ejus, quod sit missus ad quas praediximus gentes, electionem Domini contemnunt, et se ipsos segregant ab apostolorum conventu. Neque enim contendere possunt Paulum non esse apostolum, quando in hoc sit electus: neque Lucam mendacem esse possunt ostendere, veritatem nobis cum omni diligentia annuntiantem. Fortassis enim et propter hoc operatus est Deus plurima Evangelii ostendi per Lucam, quibus necesse haberent omnes uti, ut sequenti testificationi ejus, quam habet de actibus et doctrina apostolorum, omnes sequentes, et regulam veritatis inadulteratam habentes, salvari possint. Igitur testificatio ejus vera, et doctrina apostolorum manifesta et firma, et nihil subtrahens, neque alia quidem in abscondito, alia vero in manifesto docentium.

Adv. Marcion. V. 2. 3. Exinde decurrens (sc. Quodsi et ex hoc congruunt Paulo Apostolorum Acta, cur ea respuatis jam apparet, ut Deum scilicet non alium prædicantia quam creatorem, nec Christum alterius, quam creatoris, quando nec promissio Spiritus Sancti aliunde probetur exhibita, quam de instrumento Actorum.

22. CLEMENTINE RECOGNITIONS.

I. 10. Urgebat tamen profectionem dicens, se diem festum religionis suae, qui immineret, omnimodis apud Judaeam celebraturum, ibique de reliquo cum suis civibus ac fratribus permansurum, evidenter indicans, injuriae se horrore perculsum. (Acts xviii. 21.)

I. 40. Nos ergo primos elegit duodecim sibi credentes, quos Apostolos nominavit, postmodum alios septuaginta duos probatissimos discipulos, ut vel hoc modo recognita imagine Moysis crederet multitudo, quia hic est, quem praedixit Moyses venturum prophetam.

I. 60. Haec et his similia prosecutus siluit etiam Cananaeus. Post quem Barnabas qui et Matthias, qui in locum Judae subrogatus est apostolus, monere populum coepit, ne odio haberent Jesum neque blasphemarent eum. (Acts i. 26.)

I. 65. Gamaliel, princeps populi, adsurgens ait: Quiescite paullisper, O viri Israelitae, non enim advertitis tentationem quae imminet vobis, propter quod desinite ab hominibus istis, et si quidem humani consilii est quod agunt, cito cessabit, si autem a Deo est, cur sine causa peccatis nec proficitis quidquam, Dei enim voluntatem quis potest superare? Nunc ergo, quoniam quidem in vesperam vergitur dies, crastino hoc ipso in loco audientibus vobis, ego ipse cum istis disputabo, ut omnem errorem palam arguam, dilucideque confutem. (Acts v. 38, 39.)

I. 71. Cum autem vespera adfuisset, templum quidem sacerdotes claudunt; nos vero ad domum Jacobi regressi et pernoctantes ibi in oratione, ante lucem descendimus Hiericho ad quinque millia viri. Post triduum autem venit ad nos ex fratribus quidam a Gamaliele, de quo supra diximus, occultos nobis nuncios deferens, quod inimicus ille homo legationem suscepisset a Caipha pontifice, ut omnes qui crederent in Jesum, persequerentur et Damascum pergeret cum epistolis ejus, ut etiam inibi auxilio usus infidelium, fidelibus inferret exitium. (Acts ix. 1, 2.)

26. JEROME.

De Vir. Illustr. c. 7. See before under Luke, where also see other references.

[Note. The Acts of the Apostles has been, as the foregoing testimonies show, an accepted book from the earliest times. The Manicheans (see below) objected to it because of its account of the coming of the Holy Ghost. The Marcionites (see above, under Tertullian) could not accept it because of its testimony to the God of the Creation being the Father of Christ Jesus. The Ebionites (Epiph. Haer. 30. 16) rejected it because of its recording the admission of Gentiles into the church without circumcision; the Severians (Eus. H. E. IV. 29) would not have Paul's Epistles or the Acts of the Apostles because these books were in conflict with their ascetic principles. Chrysostom in his Homilies on Acts (Hom. 1) says Πολλοῖς τοῦτ' ἐπεὶ βιβλίον οὐδ' ὅτι ἐνι, γινώσκοντες ἔστιν, οὔτε αὐτὸ, οὔτε ὁ γράψας αὐτὸ καὶ συνῄεις, but he is pointing at the popular neglect of the book, not at any deliberate rejection. Photius: Quæst Amphiloeh. 145 says τὸν δὲ συγγραφεὰ τῶν Πράξεων οἱ μὲν Κλήμεντα λέγουσι τὸν Ῥώμης, ἄλλοι δὲ Βαρνάβαν, καὶ Λουκᾶν τὸν Εὐαγγελιστὴν. But this statement as to doubt of the authorship is not supported by the testimonies of early writers.

Πέτρον μὲν οὖν ἐπιστολὴ μία ἢ λεγομένη αὐτοῦ προτέρα ἀνωμολόγηται· ταύτη δὲ καὶ οἱ πάσαι πρεσβύτεροι ὡς ἀναμφιλέκτου ἐν τοῖς σφῶν αὐτῶν καταλέχονται συγγράμμασι. Τὴν δὲ φερομένην αὐτοῦ δευτέραν, οὐκ ἐνδιαθήκων μὲν εἶναι παρελήφσαμεν. Ὅμως δὲ πολλοῖς χρήσιμος φανεῖσα, μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων ἐσποινδάσθη γραφῶν. <sup>1</sup> Eusebius speaks too strongly here. Clem. Alex. in his Hypotyposes gave a brief account of the "Apocalypse of Peter" among other Antilegomena (see Eus. H. E. VI. 14). In his Stromata he frequently quotes the "Preaching of Peter" (see Strom. I. 29. 182. p. 427), &c.; and Origen (on John, Tom. XIII. c. 17. p. 226) refers to it as quoted by Heracleon, and speaks of the time which might be occupied by a controversy on its genuineness. Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. Extra Can. Rec. IV. p. 66) goes too far in saying Origen "decernere nolu" περὶ τοῦ βιβλίου, πότερόν ποτε γνήσιόν ἐστιν ἢ νόθον ἢ μικτόν, for Origen merely puts the enquiry aside because of the time it would consume. What Origen thus says is consistent with his explicit statement (περὶ ἀρχῶν Prolog. p. 49) that the "Preaching of Peter" was neither written by Peter nor by any other inspired man. Clement's quotations are overlooked in Eusebius's statement in the text. There is an obscure reference to what Peter and Paul taught the Corinthians and the Romans in words ascribed to Dionysius of Corinth in Eus. H. E. II. 25.

THE EPISTLES OF PAUL.<sup>1</sup>

1. CLEMENT OF ROME.<sup>2</sup>

Ep. I. c. V. 4. . . . Πέτρον, ὃς διὰ ζῆλον ἄδικον οὐχ' ἕνα οὐδὲ δύο, ἀλλὰ πλείονας ἐπῆνεγκεν πόνοις, καὶ οὕτω μαρτυρήσας ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον τόπον τῆς δόξης. Διὰ ζῆλον καὶ ἔριν Παῦλος ὑπομονῆς βραβεῖον ἔδειξεν, ἐπτάκις δεσμὰ φορέσας, φρυγ-αδενθεῖς, λιθασθεῖς, κήρυξ γενόμενος ἔν-τε τῇ ἀνατολῇ καὶ ἐν τῇ δύσει, τὸ γενναῖον τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ κλέος ἔλαβεν, δικαιοσύνην διδάξας ὅλον τὸν κόσμον, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως ἐλθὼν, καὶ μαρτυρήσας ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμένων, οὕτως ἀπηλλάγη τοῦ κόσμου καὶ εἰς τὸν ἅγιον τόπον ἐπορεύθη, ὑπομονῆς γενόμενος μέγιστος ὑπογραμμός.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Paul's Epistles are supposed by many to have been originally more numerous than they now are: and some have sought to show what specific Epistles were lost. An Epistle to the Laodiceans (Col. iv. 16) (see Muratorian Canon before, p. 7) has been supplied by tradition, but is obviously spurious (see Lightfoot's 'Colossians,' p. 353). An Epistle to the Corinthians is supposed to have been lost; some say there are two lost (see 1 Cor. iii. 9, and for the spurious Epistles of the Corinthians to St Paul and of St Paul to the Corinthians, as translated by Lord Byron from the Armenian, see Stanley's 'Corinthians,' p. 609). There is also supposed to have been another to the Philippians now lost (Phil. iv. 16; iii. 1, 18—compare Polycarp, § 3). Certain letters of Paul and Seneca have been manufactured (see Lightfoot's 'Philippians,' p. 268, &c.). Although Basilides is said to have been the first to reject the Pastoral Epistles and Hebrews, it appears that Marcion, who was first to make a formal collection of the letters of Paul, was the first to reject these four Epistles formally. He also called Ephesians by the name of Laodiceans. Baur divided the Pauline Epistles into three classes, the first (or Homologoumena) containing only Galatians and 2 Corinthians and Romans; the second (Antilegomena) containing Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, Philemon, and Thessalonians. The Pastoral Epistles he regarded as the third (or spurious) class. The phraseology of this division is from Eusebius; Baur attempts to show that its substance corresponds with Marcion's division. Hebrews Baur does not reckon among Paul's Epistles at all.

<sup>2</sup> See a discussion of questions regarding this and several following sections in 'Introduction to Pauline Epistles,' by Paton J. Gloag, D.D. Edin. 1874.

an expression denoting Rome itself. Another main point of controversy is the connection between "reaching the extreme west" and "bearing testimony before rulers." Some make the two clauses synchronous, so as to read that Paul's martyrdom took place in the "extreme west," wherever it was. Others regard the three clauses depending on διδάξας, ἐλθὼν, and μαρτυρήσας respectively, as making three distinct and independent statements. The punctuation varies accordingly. Lightfoot prints ἐλθὼν, while Bryennios, Hilgenfeld, and Gebhardt and Harnack have not even a comma after the word. The punctuation in our text seems to be the most natural. On the controversy as regards the second imprisonment, see the two sides well represented in Meyer's Commentary—one by Meyer himself, Einl. in den Brief an die Röm. § 1. p. 12; and the other by Huther, Einl. in die Pastoralbriefe, § 3. p. 25 (Ed. 1859). ## 8. JEROME.

De Vir. Ill. c. 5. Quia in Actibus Apostolorum plenissime de ejus conversatione scriptum est, hoc tantum dicam, quod post passionem Domini vicesimo quinto anno, i. e. secundo Neronis, eo tempore quo Festus procurator Judaeae successit Felici, Romam vinctus mittitur, et biennium in libera manens custodia, adversus Judaeos de adventu Christi quotidie disputavit. Sciendum autem in prima satisfactione, necdum Neronis imperio roborato, nec in tanta erumpente scelera, quanta de eo narrant historiae, Paulum a Nerone dimissum, ut Evangelium Christi in Occidentis quoque partibus praedicaretur, sicut ipse scribit in secunda epistola ad Timotheum, eo tempore quo et passus est, de vinculis dictans epistolam: “In prima mea satisfactione nemo mihi affuit, sed omnes me dereliquerunt: non eis imputetur. Dominus autem mihi affuit, et confortavit me, ut per me praedicatio compleretur, et audirent omnes gentes: et liberatus sum de ore leonis.” Manifestissime leonem propter crudelitatem Neronem significans. Et in sequentibus: “Liberatus sum de ore leonis.” Et statim: “Liberabit me Dominus ab omni opere malo, et salvabit me in regnum suum coeleste,” quod scilicet praesens sibi sentiret imminere martyrium. Nam et in eadem Epistola praemiserat: "Ego enim jam immolor, et tempus resolutionis meae instat." Hic ergo quarto decimo Neronis anno, eodem die quo Petrus Romae, pro Christo capite truncatur, sepultusque est in Via Ostiensi, anno post passionem Domini tricesimo septimo. Scripsit autem novem ad septem Ecclesias Epistolas: ad Romanos unam; ad Corinthios duas; ad Galatas unam; ad Ephesios unam; ad Philippenses unam; ad Colossenses unam; ad Thessalonicenses duas; praeterea ad discipulos suos, Timotheo duas, Tito unam, Philemoni unam. Epistola autem quae fertur ad Hebraeos, non ejus creditur, propter styli sermonisque dissonantiam; sed vel Barnabae, juxta Tertullianum; vel Lucae evangelistae, juxta quosdam; vel Clementis Romanae postea Ecclesiae episcopi, quem aiunt ipsi adjunctum sententias Pauli proprio ordinasse et ornasse sermone. Vel certe quia Paulus scribebat ad Hebraeos, et propter invidiam sui apud eos nominis, titulum in principio salutationis amputaverit. Scripserat ut Hebraeus Hebraice, id est, suo eloquio disertissime, ut ea quae eloquenter scripta fuerant in Hebræo, eloquentius verterentur in Graecum: et hanc causam esse, quod a ceteris Pauli Epistolis discrepare videatur. Legunt quidam et ad Laodicenses, sed sub omnibus exploditur.

14. THEOPHILUS.

Ad Autolyce. I. 14. p. 79. Ὁ γὰρ δοὺς στόμα εἰς τὸ λαλεῖν, καὶ πλάσας οὓς εἰς τὸ ἀκοῦειν, καὶ ποιήσας ὀφθαλμοὺς εἰς τὸ ὁρᾶν, ἐξετάσει τὰ πάντα καὶ κρίνει τὸ δίκαιον, ἀποδιδούς ἐκάστῳ κατὰ ἀξίαν τῶν μισθῶν. Τοῖς μὲν καθ' ὑπομονὴν διὰ ἔργων ἀγαθῶν ζητοῦσιν τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν δωρήσεται ζωὴν αἰώνιον, χάραν, εἰρήνην, ἀνάπαυσιν, καὶ πλήθη ἀγαθῶν, ὧν οὔτε ὀφθαλμὸς εἶδεν, οὔτε οὖς ἤκουσεν, οὔτε ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου ἀνέβη. Τοῖς δὲ ἀπίστοις, καὶ καταφρονηταῖς καὶ ἀπειθοῦσι τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, ἐπὶ ἐμφύρωνται μοιχείαις, καὶ πορνείαις, καὶ ἄρσενοχοιτίαις, καὶ πλεονεξίαις, καὶ ταῖς ἀθεμίτοις εἰδωλολατρείαις, ἔσται ὁργὴ καὶ θυμὸς, θλίψις καὶ στενοχωρία· καὶ τὸ τέλος τοὺς τοιούτους κατέξει πῦρ αἰώνιον. (Rom. ii. 6, &c.)

Ibid. III. 14. p. 126. Καὶ διδάσκει ἀποδιδόναι πᾶσι τὰ πάντα, τῷ τὴν τιμὴν τὴν τιμὴν, τῷ τὸν φόβον τὸν φόβον, τῷ τὸν φόρον τὸν φόρον, μηδενὶ μηδὲν ὀφελεῖν ἢ μόνον τὸ ἀγαπᾶν πάντα. (Rom. xiii. 7, 8.)

15. CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

Pædag. I. 8. § 70. (p. 140.) “Ἰδὲ οὖν,” φησὶν ὁ Παῦλος, “χρηστότητα καὶ ἀποτομίαν Θεοῦ, ἐπὶ μὲν τοὺς πεσόντας, ἀποτομίαν, ἐπὶ δὲ σε, χρηστότητα, ἐὰν ἐπιμείνης τῇ χρηστότητι,” τουτέστι τῇ εἰς Χριστὸν πίστει. (Rom. xi. 22.)

Strom. III. 11. § 75. (p. 544.) Ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὁ Παῦλος ἐν τῇ πρὸς Ῥωμαίους ἐπιστολῇ γράφει, “Ὅτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, πῶς ἔτι ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ; . . . ὅτι ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος συνεσταυρώθη, ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας,” ἕως, “μηδὲ παριστάνετε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν ὅπλα ἀδικίας τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ.” (Rom. vi. 2, 6, 13.)

16. TERTULLIAN.

De corona, c. 6. Nec natura vos, inquit, docet? ut cum ad Romanos, natura facere dicens nationes ea quae sunt legis, et legem naturalem suggerit, et naturalem legalem. (Rom. c. ii.)

Scorpiae, c. 13. Sicut et ad Romanos (sc. Paulus inquit): “Non solum autem, verum etiam exultantes in pressuris, certi quod pressura tolerantiam perficit, tolerantia vero probationem, probatio autem spem, spes vero non confundit." (Rom. v. 3-5.)

CHAPTERS XV. AND XVI.

17. ORIGEN.

Comment. in Ep. ad Rom. Tom. IV. p. 687. (Migne, IV. 1290.) Caput hoc (xvi. 25-27) Marcion, a quo Scripturae evangelicae atque apostolicae interpolatae sunt, de hac Epistola penitus abstulit. Et non solum hoc, sed et ab eo loco ubi scriptum est: "Omne autem quod non est ex fide, peccatum est" (xiv. 23), usque ad finem cuncta dissecuit. In aliis vero exemplaribus, id est, in his quae non sunt a Marcione temerata, hoc ipsum caput (xvi. 25-27) diverse positum invenimus. In nonnullis etenim codicibus post eum locum quem supra diximus (xiv. 23), hoc est: "Omne autem, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est," statim cohaerens habetur: "Ei autem qui potens est vos confirmare." Alii vero codices in fine id, ut nunc est positum, continent.<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup> The only other passage from ancient authors that can be quoted against the genuineness of the 15th and 16th chapters is Tertullian adv. Marc. c. 5, 14, who says, "Bene autem quod et in clausula (xiv. 10) tribunal Christi comminatur." This is needlessly supposed to indicate that the words were at the very end of the Epistle in Tertullian's opinion. But on internal grounds many in recent times have rejected those chapters, or received them only in part. Some (including Griesbach) put the Doxology (xvi. 25-27) after xiv. 23. Others reject it also. Baur (Paulus, Part II. c. 3) finds in those two chapters the work of a disciple of Paul who wished to soften the keen Anti-Judaism of the Apostle by something more palatable to the Judaizers. Davidson, Int. to N. T. Vol. I. p. 134, rejects chapter xvi. and the Doxology, but retains chapter xv. Hilgenfeld, Einl. p. 320, retains both chapters, but rejects the Doxology (p. 326). Semler, Eichhorn, Schulz, Ewald, and others, consider the chapters (or large portions of them) Pauline, but out of their place in this Epistle. So also Reuss (Gesch. § 111) says, the whole of the last chapter is a separate letter of commendation for Phoebe to take to some place or other—Ephesus? See external testimonies to the chapters in Tisch., Nov. Test., and outline of recent opinions in Hilgenfeld's Einleitung and Mangold's Bleck's Einleitung.

C. 24. 1. Κατανοήσωμεν, ἀγαπητοὶ, πῶς ὁ δεσπότης ἐπι-δείκνυται διανεκῶς ἡμῖν τὴν μέλλουσαν ἀνάστασιν ἔσεσθαι, ἥς τὴν ἀπαρχὴν ἐποιήσατο τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστή-

C. 24. 5. Ἐξῆλθεν ὁ σπεύρων καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν γῆν ἕκαστον

C. 37. 4. Οἱ μεγάλοι δόξα τῶν μικρῶν οὐ δύνανται εἶναι, οὔτε οἱ μικροὶ δόξα τῶν μεγάλων· σύγκρασίς τις ἐστὶν ἐν πᾶσι, καὶ ἐν τούτοις χοῖσις. Λάβωμεν τὸ σῶμα ἡμῶν. Ἡ κεφαλὴ δόξα τῶν ποδῶν οὐδέν ἐστιν, οὕτως οὐδὲ οἱ πόδες δόξα τῆς κεφαλῆς·

τὰ δὲ ἐλάχιστα μέλη τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν ἀναγκαῖα καὶ ἐνχρηστὰ ἐστὶν ὅλον τῷ σώματι. Ἀλλὰ πάντα συμπνεῖ, καὶ ὑποταγῇ μιᾷ χρῆται εἰς τὸ σωῆσθαι ὅλον τὸ σῶμα. (1 Cor. xii. 12, &c.)

C. 47. 1. Ἀναλάβετε τὴν ἐπιστολὴν τοῦ μακαρίου Παύλου τοῦ ἀποστόλου. Τί πρῶτον ἡμῖν ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἔγραψεν; Ἐπ' ἀληθείας πνευματικῶς ἐπέστειλεν ἡμῖν, περὶ ἑαυτοῦ τε καὶ Κηρᾶ τε καὶ Ἀπόλλω, διὰ τὸ καὶ τότε προσκλίσεις ὑμᾶς ποιῆσθαι. (1 Cor. iii. 13, &c.)

C. 48. 6. Καὶ ζητεῖν τὸ κοινωφελὲς πᾶσιν, καὶ μὴ τὸ ἑαυτοῦ. (1 Cor. x. 24.)

C. 49. 1. Ὁ ἔχων ἀγάπην ἐν Χριστῷ ποιησάτω τὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ παραγγέλματα. Τὸν δεσμὸν τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ τίς δύναται ἐξηγήσασθαι; Τὸ μεγαλεῖον τῆς καλλονῆς αὐτοῦ τίς ἀρετὸς ἐξηπεῖν; Τὸ ὕψος, εἰς ὃ ἀνάγει ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνεκδιήγητόν ἐστιν. Ἀγάπη κολλᾷ ἡμᾶς τῷ Θεῷ· ἀγάπη καλύπτει πληθος ἁμαρτιῶν· ἀγάπη πάντα ἀνέχειται, πάντα μακροθυμεῖ· οὐδὲν βάνανσον ἐν ἀγάπῃ, οὐδὲν ἐπερίφρανον· ἀγάπη σχίσμα οὐκ ἔχει, ἀγάπη οὐ στασιάζει, ἀγάπη πάντα ποιεῖ ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ· ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ ἐτελειώθησαν πάντες οἱ ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ· δόξα ἀγάπης οὐδὲν εὐάρεστόν ἐστιν τῷ Θεῷ. Ἐν ἀγάπῃ προσελάβετο ἡμᾶς ὁ δεσπότης· διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην, ἣν ἔσχεν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, τὸ αἷμα αὐτοῦ ἔδωκεν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν, ἐν θελήματι Θεοῦ, καὶ τὴν σάρκα ὑπὲρ τῆς σαρκὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν ψυχῶν ἡμῶν. Ὅρατε ἀγαπητοί, πῶς μέγα καὶ θαυμαστόν ἐστιν ἡ ἀγάπη, καὶ τῆς τελειότητος αὐτῆς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐξήγησις. (1 Cor. xiii.)

Extract from Stephanus Gobarus in Photius, Bibl. [see Routh's Rel. Sac. Vol. I. p. 219]. After quoting τὰ ἡτοιμασμένα τοῖς διζαίοις ἀγαθὰ οὔτε ὁφθαλμοῖς εἶδεν οὔτε οὖς ἤκουσεν οὔτε ἐπὶ καρδίᾳ ἀνθρώπου ἀνέβη Stephanus Gobarus proceeds Ἡγήσιππος μὲν τοι . . . ματὴν μὲν εἰρῆσθαι ταῦτα λέγει καὶ καταψεύδεσθαι τοῖς ταῦτα φασμένοις τῶν τε θείων γραφῶν καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου λέγοντος Μεγάριοι οἱ ὁφθαλμοὶ ἡμῶν &c. (1 Cor. ii. 9; comp. Mat. xiii. 16.) See Lightfoot, Galatians, 2nd Ed., p. 320 and note. Hegesippus is reasoning against a misuse of the quotation; is not disputing its authority, as Baur would have it. See Routh, Rel. Sac., Vol. I. p. 281.

13. ATHENAGORAS.

De resurrect. mort. c. 18. Οὐ γὰρ σώζεται τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἐν τῷ παρόντι βίῳ· διὰ τὸ πολλοὺς μὲν ἀθόους καὶ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν καὶ κακίαν ἐπιτηδεύοντας μέχρι τελειῆς διατελεῖν κακῶν ἀπειράτους, καὶ τοὐναντίον τοὺς κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν ἐξηγασμένον τὸν ἑαυτῶν βίον ἐπιδειξαμένους ἐν ὁδότηας ζῆν, ἐν ἐληρείας, ἐν συκοφαντίας, αἰκίας τε καὶ παντοίας κακοπαθείας. . . . Ἐνδύλον παντὶ τὸ λειπόμενον, ὅτι δεῖ κατὰ τὸν ἀλόστολον τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο καὶ σκεδαστὸν ἐνδύσασθαι ἀφθαρσίαν, ἵνα, ζωοποιηθέντων ἐξ ἀναστάσεως τῶν νεκρωθέντων καὶ πάλιν ἐνωθέντων τῶν χωρισμένων ἢ καὶ πάντῃ διαλελυμένων, ἕκαστος κομίσιται δικαίως ἂν διὰ τοῦ σώματος ἔπραξεν, εἴτε ἀγαθὰ, εἴτε κακά. (1 Cor. xv. 54; 2 Cor. v. 10.)

Ibid. c. 19. Εἰ μὲν γὰρ μηδεμία μηδαμοῦ τῶν ἀνθρώποις πεπραγμένων γίνοιτο κρίσις, οὐδὲν ἔξουσιν πλεῖον τῶν ἀλόγων ἄνθρωποι· μᾶλλον δὲ κακείνων πράξουσιν ἀθλιώτερον, οἱ τὰ πάθῃ δουλαγωγοῦντες καὶ φροντίζοντες εὐσεβείας καὶ δικαιοσύνης ἢ τῆς ἄλλης ἀρετῆς, ὁ δὲ κτηνώδης βίος ἄριστος, ἀρετὴ δὲ ἀνόητος, δίκης δὲ ἀπειλή γέλως πλατὺς, τὸ δὲ πᾶσαν θεραπεύειν ἡδονὴν ἀγαθὸν τὸ μέγιστον, δόγμα δὲ κοιτὸν τούτων ἀπάντων καὶ νόμος εἷς τὸ τοῖς ἀκολάστοις καὶ λήργοις φίλον. Φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν· ἄριστον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν. (1 Cor. xv. 30 &c. Comp. Isa. xxii. 13.)

Legatio, c. 12. Εἰθ' οἱ μὲν τὸν βίον τοῦτον νομίζοντες, φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν, ἄριστον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν, καὶ τὸν θάνατον βαθὲν ἔπνον καὶ λήθην τιθέμενοι (ἔπνω καὶ θανάτῳ διδυμάσσει) πιστεύονται θεοσεβεῖν. (1 Cor. xv. 32. Comp. Isa. xxii. 13.)

Τοῖς γὰρ ταῦτα πράσσουσιν ὁ Θεὸς οὐκ ἐμμενέσκειται, ἐὰν μὴ πρῶτον ἑαυτοὺς καθαρίσωσιν ἀπὸ παντὸς μόλυσμους. (1 Cor. vi. 9.)

1. BARNABAS.

C. 6. 15. Ναὸς γὰρ ἅγιος, ἀδελφοί μου, τῷ Κυρίῳ τὸ κατοικοῦντήριον ἡμῶν τῆς καρδίας. (Eph. ii. 22.)

<sup>1</sup> The testimony of the early Church is unanimous in favour of the Pauline origin of the Epistle. The only doubt has been as to its destination. Tertullian charged Marcion and other heretics with the ascription of a false title to it—as though addressed to the Laodiceans. Basil stated that in ancient copies it was not ascribed to the Ephesians, but to the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus: Ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς Ἑφεσίοις ἐπιστέλλων ὡς γνησίως ἠνωμένοις τῷ ὄντι δι' ἐπιγνώσεως, ὄντας αὐτοὺς ἰδιαζόντως ὠνόμασεν, εἰπὼν· Τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσι καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· οὕτω καὶ οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν παραδεδώκασι, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν τοῖς παλαιοῖς τῶν ἀντιγράφων εὗρήκαμεν (Basil. contra Eunomium). Of this statement confirmation is found in the total absence of the words ἐν Ἑφέσῳ from the beginning of the Epistle in the Sinaitic MS (S) and their insertion by a later hand in the Vatican (B). In the quotation from Origen in Cramer's Catena, the words ἐν Ἑφέσῳ are perhaps omitted, though Origen elsewhere ascribes the Epistle to Paul. (See extracts under 'Origen.')

Schleiermacher and De Wette, on internal grounds, objected to this Epistle. Baur, Hilgenfeld and others have included Colossians in the same condemnation. Baur regards Ephesians as secondary to Colossians, but supposes them to have been contemporaneous and connected. The ground on which he thus makes them fall together, (just as Paley, Hor. Paul., c. VI. made them stand together) is the nature of their resemblance to each other, which is not mere resemblance but repetition. He finds also a mutual dependence; as in Eph. iv. 21 compared with Coloss. iv. 16. He endeavours to prove that they are not Pauline because of the continued discourse upon the spirit-world, which is characteristic of Gnosticism, but unlike St Paul: the use of Gnostic terms and implied reference to Gnostic doctrines: the acquaintance with Montanism: the state of the development of the Church, &c. The special objections of Baur and his followers to Ephesians are based on its want of salutations and personal allusions (but see 2 Cor., Gal. and 1 & 2 Thess.); and passages in the Epistle which seem to intimate that Paul himself had not been their teacher (e.g. i. 15; iii. 2, 3; iv. 21). The special objections to Colossians are found in its development of Soteriology into Christology, and that Christology an echo of Gnosticism. [On the resemblance between the Epistles see Hilg., Einl. p. 671: on the points of essential difference see Reuss, Gesch. der heil. Schriften N. T. § 118. See also Gloag's Introd. to Pauline Epistles, p. 328.]

After all has been said that can be said against the Epistles, their Pauline origin is not disproved. The objections assume (1) that the seeds and intimations of Gnosticism in St Paul's day were not sufficiently obvious to a mind like his to admit of his exposing them; and (2) that the Gnostics of the second century did not adopt the Apostle's expressions, and endeavour to weave them into their systems. Those assumptions are unwarrantable. In regard to the first point, it can be proved that, from the very necessity of the case, Gnosticism arose the moment that Christianity came into contact with heathen philosophy, especially with the combinations of Judaism and heathen philosophy which were prevalent in such places as Alexandria and Antioch in the first Christian century. In regard to the second, it is easy to see how Valentinus adopted such words as πλήρωμα, σοφία &c., and constructed his system; but impossible to understand how such epistles as those two could be written in the second century when the air was full of the speculations of Valentinus and others like him. Though Baur asserts that Valentinus' system was "too original" to be explained by what Tertullian said of it, the conclusion of most men is that Tertullian was right: Valentinus . . . materiam ad scripturas excogitavit.

Since Ussher it has been often supposed that the Ephesian Epistle was originally a circular letter, of which the copy to the Ephesians remains, although it was the letter sent to Laodicea that the Colossians were to get. This theory accounts for the statement of Basil, the practice of Marcion, and the evidence of 8 and B.

<sup>1</sup> Polycarp. This is only found in the Latin. As it stands it is a conjunction of a Psalm and of the Epistle as being parts of "these scriptures" (of which he has been speaking). Doubt has been thrown upon the genuineness of this, on the ground that the Latin version has inserted "et quod dictum est" in c. 2. between two passages of the New Testament, while the Greek has only καί. But in c. 2. the first quotation is introduced with εἶπεν ὁ Κύριος διδάσκων, which is translated in the Latin "quod dominus docens dixit." To insert "et quod dictum est" before the second quotation in that case as a translation of καί is therefore to make no real change on the original; while to introduce "ut his scripturis dictum est" in the case of c. 12 would have been a serious change. Dr Davidson (Int. to N. T. I. 382. 2nd Ed.) incorrectly states that in c. 2 "The translator has introduced a word of Jesus's with 'as it is written.'" fideles, essentiae vocabulo nuncupatos; ut quomodo a sancto sancti, a justo justi, a sapiente sapientes: ita ab eo qui est, hi "qui sunt" appellentur. . . . Alii vero simpliciter, non ad "eos qui

Modo, ut his scripturis dictum est. "Irascimini, et nolite peccare." et "Sol non occidat super iracundiam vestram." (Ps. iv. 4; Eph. iv. 26.)

of Marcion's Canon: Galatians, Corinthians (1 and 2), Romans, Thessalonians (1 and 2), Ephesians, Philemon, Philippians. Then come the words: He has also some portions of the Epistle called "To the Laodiceans." Epiphanius appears to have become confused as to Marcion's 'Laodiceans,' which he supposed to be different from the Epistle to the Ephesians. The second quotation in our text shows that Marcion was really quoting from 'Ephesians' when Epiphanius supposed him to draw from some distinct source called Laodiceans. And accordingly he apostrophizes Marcion in order to tell him that those Laodicean words are also in the canonical Ephesians!

XIX.

(COMPARE SECTIONS I-III, XI, XII.)

<sup>1</sup> The Epistle to the Colossians contains many of the same words and phrases as that to the Ephesians. And yet the purpose of this is quite distinct from that of the other—being definitely and polemically directed against certain false teachers who were misleading the Colossian church; whereas the other Epistle deals with doctrines more generally and comprehensively. Moreover, the real subject of the Epistle is not the same in each case; the argument of Eph. i. and ii. is not in the Colossian Epistle at all. In other cases the same words are used, but with a different reference (comp. Eph. iv. 16 with Col. ii. 19). It is in expressions rather than in purpose that the points of resemblance and the instances of repetition are found (see Reuss: Les Epîtres Pauliniennes, II. 149). The genuineness of Colossians was not disputed until this century, and the objections rest on subjective grounds. First of all (as is stated in the notes on Ephesians), the close correspondence between this Epistle and that to Ephesus is said to awaken suspicion that one at least is a forgery. While some for this cause put away Ephesians, others discard both. Then further, the words in the Epistles which are familiar in Gnostic writings, and not only familiar but keynotes of such systems as that of Valentinus, are regarded as proof that they originated while those systems were in vogue i.e., in the second century (see notes on Ephesians). The polemical references in Colossians are next compared with the doctrines of Ebionitism: and the conclusion is that in regard to circumcision (ii. 11), peculiarities of diet (ii. 21), and angel-worship (ii. 21), the writer was denouncing Ebionites. In order to take the ground away from the whole system, he proclaims the doctrine of the Person of Christ against the well-known Ebionite theories that Jesus was a creature, created not begotten of God, as a chief angel might be. All this might be admitted in so far as regards Ebionitism: but it does not give a date in the second century, for the principles of Ebionitism must have been at work from the time when Jews adopted Christianity without fully accepting the Gospel doctrine of Christ's Personal Deity. Baur's argument for a date in the second century really rests upon the occurrence of its words and phrases in Gnostic systems. Besides what was said in the notes to Ephesians as to the greater probability of a Gnostic quoting and twisting Pauline words, than of a forger in Paul's name adopting the terminology of a Gnostic with whom he did not wish to be supposed to agree, we may here draw attention to the actual use of the words in question by Valentinus (whom Baur cites) and by the author of Colossians respectively. In the Valentinian system πλήρωμα, σοφία, πίστις, σταυρός, and so on, are used with technical meanings which are not applicable in any one case in the Epistles, unless perhaps that the varied fortunes of σοφία in the Valentinian fable may be supposed to correspond to the Pauline πολυποίκιλος σοφία of Ephesians iii. 10, or that the legend of the πλήρωμα of Valentinian aeons contributing to make up the Saviour may be imagined to resemble Col. i. 19; ii. 9. But even when the resemblance is admitted, the grotesque story of the Gnostic (however metaphorically interpreted) is so evidently a perversion of the Scripture teaching, that to imagine it the original and the Colossian words the imitation is to go beyond all probability.

On the relative priority of the two closely related Epistles critical opinion widely varies. If that to Colossians was actually first written, the reference (Col. iv. 16) to the Epistle from Laodicea (which was probably that we know as

<sup>1</sup> Baur was the first to doubt the authenticity of this Epistle. He argues that its language and its apocalyptic ideas are not Pauline. His views have not been widely adopted. C. 7. 3. Καὶ ἴδωμεν τί καλὸν, καὶ τί τερπνὸν καὶ προσδεκτὸν ἐνώπιον τοῦ ποιήσαντος ἡμᾶς. (1 Tim. v. 4.)

<sup>1</sup> 1 Timothy. The "Pastoral Epistles" are so named because they contain instructions to young Pastors; although the title does not strictly apply to 2 Timothy. The external testimony to them all is sufficient. Clement of Rome may be said to quote Titus, Polycarp quotes 1 Timothy; Athenagoras and Theophilus do so also. Without dwelling on the coincidence in expression between Justin Martyr and 1 Timothy, we may consider that (even before Irenaeus and Clement of Alexandria, whose testimony is beyond dispute) the early date of the Pastoral Epistles as a whole (and they stand or fall together) is established. It is to be observed on the other hand that Marcion, Basilides, and other heretics rejected them all (see Tert. adv. Marc. V. 21, and Jerome), and that Tatian rejected those to Timothy but accepted Titus (perhaps because it regards the heretics as more specially Jewish). From Tatian's time till this century the Pastoral Epistles were accepted by all. Schmidt (Int. to N. T. p. 260) suggested doubts because of discrepancies with Acts. But Schleiermacher, here as elsewhere, was the leader of many. In his letter to Gass (1807) he denounced 1 Timothy as an imitation of 2 Timothy and Titus, and founded special objections on its peculiarity of language, historical difficulties, and the plan of the Epistle, which he regarded as unworthy of the great Apostle. Baur of course rejected them all. See his "Die sogenannten Pastoral-Briefe," 1835, and "Paulus der Apostel," 1867. Reuss (Les Epîtres Pauliniennes, 1873) rejects 1 Timothy and Titus, but admits 2 Timothy as written during the first imprisonment. Meyer, like De Wette, wavered at different times, but in 1854 (and 1872) believed that they depended on the more than doubtful basis of a second imprisonment. Huther and Wiesinger ably defend the authenticity of the letters. In our own country Davidson, Int. to N. T. 1868, ably assails them. See Gloag, Int. to Pauline Epistles, for a clear statement of the whole case.

C. 12. 1. (comp. 17. 4.) Ἐκδεχόμεθα οὖν καθ' ὅραν τὴν βασίλειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ καὶ δικαιοσύνῃ, ἐπειδὴ οὐκ οἶδμεν τὴν ἡμέραν τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ Θεοῦ. (1 Tim. vi. 14; 2 Tim. i. 10; iv. 1, 8; Titus ii. 13.)

C. 15. 1. Οὐκ οἶομαι δὲ ὅτι μικρὰν συμβουλίαν ἐποιησάμην περὶ ἐγκρατείας, ἣν ποιήσας τις οὐ μετανόησει, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐαυτὸν σώσει καὶ τὸν συμβουλευσάντα. Comp. 1 Tim. iv. 16.

<sup>3</sup> This and the previous passages can scarcely be dissociated from 1 Tim. The preacher may or may not have been the Bishop or President (comp. Just. Apol. I. 67), but he was one who identified his own Christian life with that of his hearers. The μετὰ τὸν Θεόν seems to indicate that his exhortation followed the reading of the Divine word. In 2 Clem. 1. 1 he claims Christ as God the Judge of quick and dead; in 3. 1 he claims to know the Father of Truth through Him; and there is nothing to prevent—there is much in the tone of the Homily to warrant—our regarding this μετὰ τὸν Θεόν as a reference to the reading of New Testament Scripture.

<sup>2</sup> Schleiermacher says that this quotation is too vague to be accounted a real quotation, and at all events cannot resist the suspicion produced by the subsequent omission in Polycarp (when treating of wives and widows) of all allusion to this, the only Epistle in N. T. dealing with the subject of widows. See § 16, § 17. p. 229 of Berlin Edition of 1836. Arguments from such omission are always precarious. And moreover Polycarp in the next sentence (c. 4. 2) closely resembles 1 Tim. v. 14 and Titus ii. 4.

Ἐπὶ τούτοις ὁ αὐτὸς ἀνὴρ (Ἡγήσιππος) διηγούμενος τὰ κατὰ τοὺς δηλουμένους, ἐπιλέγει ὡς ἄρα μέχρι τῶν τότε χρόνων παρθένος καθαρὰ καὶ ἀδιάφθορος ἔμεινεν ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἐν ἀδήλῳ που σκοτίῳ φωλεόντων εἰσέτι τότε τῶν, εἰ καὶ τινες ἐπύρρον, παραρθεῖρουν ἐπιχειροῦντων τὸν ἔγγιῳ κανόνα τοῦ σωτηρίου κληρύγματος. Ὡς δ' ὁ ἱερός τῶν ἀποστόλων χορὸς διάφορον εἰλήφει τοῦ βίου τέλος, παρεληλύθει τε ἡ γενεὰ ἐκείνη τῶν αὐταῖς ἀκοαῖς τῆς ἐνθέου σοφίας ἐπακοῦσαι κατηξιωμένων, τηρηαῦτα τῆς ἀθέου πλάνης ἀρχὴν ἐλάμβανεν ἡ σύστασις, διὰ τῆς τῶν ἑτεροδιδασκάλων ἀπάτης· οἱ καὶ, ἅτε μηδενὸς ἔτι τῶν ἀποστόλων λειπομένου, γυμνῇ λοιπὸν ἴδι τῇ κεφαλῇ τῷ τῆς ἀληθείας κληρύγματι τὴν ψευδῶν νυμον γυνῶσιν ἀντικηρύττειν ἐπεχείρουν.

<sup>3</sup> Baur made a great deal of this passage. The chief point is the assertion that the Church remained a chaste virgin until after the death of the Apostles. Upon this Baur founded an argument for the late date of the Pastoral Epistles as they dealt with the corruption of the Church caused by heresy. But the reply is that Hegesippus only says that those who pervert the sound doctrine of the Gospel did not dare to show their heads freely until after the death of the Apostles. Baur also urges that Hegesippus, an Ebionite, was unlikely to quote the words of St Paul; but it is obvious that a forger in the Pauline interest was as little likely to quote Hegesippus. There is, moreover, no valid proof that Hegesippus was a foe of Paulinism. See Wieseler, die Briefe an Timotheus u. Titus, Supplement-Band III, Herzog's Encyclopaedic. He identifies the heresies of the Pastoral Epistles with the teachings of Apollonius of Tyana.

Comment. in ep. ad Tit. prooem. (Vol. VII. p. 685.) Licet non sint digni fide, qui fidem primam irritam fecerunt, Marcionem loquor et Basilidem et omnes haereticos, qui vetus laniant Testamentum: tamen eos aliqua ex parte ferremus, si saltem in novo continerent manus suas, et non auderent Christi (ut ipsi jactitant) boni Dei filii, vel Evangelistas violare, vel Apostolos. Nunc vero quum et Evangelia ejus dissipaverint, et Apostolorum epistolas, non Apostolorum Christi fecerint esse, sed proprias, miror quomodo sibi Christianorum nomen audeant vindicare. Ut enim de caeteris epistolis taceam, de quibus quicquid contrarium suo dogmati viderant, eraserunt, nonnullas integras repudiandas crediderunt, ad Timotheum videlicet utramque, ad Hebraeos, et ad Titum quam nunc conamur exponere. Et si quidem redderent causas cur eas Apostoli non putarent; tentaremus aliquid respondere et forsitan satisfacere lectori. Nunc vero cum haeretica auctoritate pronuntient et dicant: "illa epistola Pauli est, haec non est," ea auctoritate refelli se pro veritate intelligant, qua ipsi non erubescunt falsa simulare. Sed Tatianus, Encratitarum patriarches, qui et ipse nonnullas Pauli epistolas repudiavit, hanc vel maxime, hoc est ad Titum, Apostoli pronunciandam credidit, parvi pendens Marcionis et aliorum, qui cum eo in hac parte consentiunt, assertionem. Scribit igitur Apostolus, o Paula et Eustochium, de Nicopoli, quae in Actiaco littore sita, nunc possessionis vestrae pars vel maxima est; et scribit ad Titum discipulum suum, et in Christo filium, quem Cretae reliquerat ad ecclesias instruendas: praecepitque ei, ut cum e duobus Artemas, seu Tychicus Cretam fuerit appulsus, ipse Nicopolim veniat. Justum quippe erat, ut ille qui dixerat, "Sollicitudo mea omnium ecclesiarum," et qui Evangelium Christi usque ad Illyricum de Jerosolymis proficiscens, fundaverat, non pateretur et sui et Titi absentia Cretenses esse desertos, a quibus primum idololatriae semina pullularunt: sed mitteret eis pro se et Tito Arteman, vel Tychicum, quorum doctrina et solatio confoverentur.

Comment. in Ep. ad Philem. prooem. (Vol. VII. p. 741.) Qui nolunt inter epistolas Pauli eam recipere quae ad Philemonem scribitur, aiunt, non semper Apostolum, nec omnia, Christo in se loquente, dixisse: quia nec humana imbecillitas unum tenorem Sancti Spiritus ferre potuisset: nec hujus corpusculi necessitates sub praesentia Domini semper complerentur; velut disponere prandium, cibum capere, esurire, saturari, ingesta digerere, exhausta complere; taceo de caeteris, quae exquisite et coacte replicant. . . . His et caeteris istiusmodi, volunt autem epistolam non esse Pauli, quae ad Philemonem scribitur: aut etiam si Pauli sit, nihil habere quod aedificare nos possit; et a plerisque veteribus repudiatam, dum commendandi tantum scribatur officio, non docendi. At e contrario qui germanae auctoritatis eam esse defendunt, dicunt nunquam in toto orbe a cunctis ecclesiis fuisse susceptam, nisi Pauli apostoli crederetur: et hac lege ne secundam quidem ad Timotheum, et ad Galatas eos debere suscipere, de quibus et ipse humanae imbecillitatis exempla protulerit. "Penulam quam reliqui Troade apud Carpum, veniens tecum affer." Et: "Utinam excidantur qui vos conturbant." Inveniri plurima et ad Romanos et ad caeteras ecclesias, maximeque ad Corinthios remissius et quotidiano pene sermone dictata, in quibus apostolus loquatur: "Caeteris autem ego dico, non Dominus." Quas et ipsas quia aliquid tale habeant, aut Pauli epistolas non putandas, aut si istae recipiuntur, recipiendam esse et ad Philemonem, ex praedjudicio similium receptarum. Valde autem eos et simpliciter errare, si putent cibum emere, hospitium praeparare, vestimenta conquirere, esse peccatum. . . . Et quoniam Marcionis fecimus mentionem, Pauli esse epistolam ad Marcionem, saltem Marcione auctore doceantur. Qui cum caeteras epistolas ejusdem vel non susceperit, vel quaedam in his mutaverit atque corroserit, in hanc solam manus non est ausus mittere: quia sua illam brevitates defendebat. Sed mihi videntur dum epistolam simplicitatis arguunt, suam imperitiam prodere; non intelligentes quid in singulis sermonibus virtutis ac sapientiae lateat. Quae, orantibus vobis, et ipso nobis Sancto Spiritu suggerente, quo scripta sunt, suis locis explanare conabimur. Si autem brevitatis habetur contemptui, contemnatur Abdias, Naiim, Sophonias, et alii duodecim prophetarum, in quibus tam mira et tam grandia sunt quae feruntur, ut nescias utrum brevitatem sermonum in illis admirari debeas, an magnitudinem sensuum. Quod si intelligerent hi, qui epistolam ad Philemonem repudiant, numquam brevitatem despicerent; quae pro laciniosis legis oneribus, evangelico decore conscripta est, dum breviatum consummatumque sermonem facit Dominus super terram. Sed jam ipsa Apostoli verba ponenda sunt, quae ita incipiunt: Paulus vinctus Christi Jesu, &c.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The chief interest in regard to this Epistle attaches to the history of opinions on its Canonicity. See a very full account of the history of the circulation and acceptance of the Epistle in Bleek's Commentar zu dem Brief an die Hebräer (Einl. §§ 21-100), and (after Bleek) in Alford's Commentary, Vol. IV. Part 1. It was accepted as Paul's in Alexandria and throughout the Eastern Church from the earliest times downwards. In the Latin Church, on the other hand, it was not explicitly favoured by any writer of the Latin Church (either in Rome or Africa) until the fourth century, when the united influence of Jerome and Augustine gave it an apostolic place in the esteem of the Church. The undoubted instances of correspondence between the Epistle of Clement of Rome and Hebrews become therefore specially interesting, and they are pretty fully given in the text. That it was written to Alexandrian Jews led to its less immediate recognition in the Western Church than in Alexandria; its apparent countenance to the views of the Montanists (VI. 4-8) perhaps made the orthodox Latins reject it, so that the Montanists were afraid to quote it as an authority. Many authors (or scribes) have been suggested for it. Luther's idea that it might be Apollos has been largely adopted,—mainly in a kind of despair of finding any better solution of the difficulty.

<sup>1</sup> Barnabas has several passages which are parallel with the Epistle to the Hebrews rather than suggestive of it. Comp. c. 5 and 6 with Hebrews, especially c. 5. 1 with Heb. xii. 24; c. 6. 11 with Heb. vi. 6; and c. 19. 9, &c. with Heb. xiii. 7, &c. There is αἷμα τοῦ ῥαντισματος αὐτοῦ, Barn. 5. 1, which suggests Heb. xii. 24 and 1 Pet. i. 2.

Jerome, De Vir. Ill. c. 15. Clemens scripsit ex persona Romanæ Ecclesiæ, ad Ecclesiam Corinthiorum valde utilem epistolam, quæ et in nonnullis locis publice legitur; quæ mihi videtur characteri epistolæ, quæ sub Pauli nomine ad Hebræos fertur, convenire. Sed et multis de eadem epistola, non solum sensibus, sed juxta verborum quoque ordinem abutitur. Omnino grandis in utraque similitudo est.

C. 11. 6. Ὡστε, ἀδελφοί μου, μὴ διψυχῶμεν, ἀλλὰ ἐλπίσαντες ὑπομείνωμεν, ἵνα καὶ τὸν μισθὸν κομισώμεθα. Πιστὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ ἐπαγγειλάμενος τὰς ἀντιμισθίας ἀποδιδόναι ἐκείνων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ. (Heb. x. 23. Comp. Mat. xvi. 27; Rom. ii. 6.)

4. POLYCARP.

Philipp. c. 12. 1. Deus autem et pater Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et ipse sempiternus pontifex, Dei filius, Jesus Christus, aedificet vos in fide et veritate et in omni mansuetudine, et sine iracundia et in patientia &c. et det vobis sortem et partem inter sanctos suos. (Heb. iv. 14; vi. 20; vii. 3. Compare Acts xx. 32 and viii. 21.)

5. HERMAS.<sup>1</sup>

Ibid. c. 113. p. 340 D. Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μεληχισεδὲκ βασιλεὺς Σαλῆμ καὶ αἰώνιος ἱερεὺς ὑψίστου ἐπαρχῶν. (Heb. v. 9, 10; vi. 20; vii. 12.)

<sup>1</sup> Hermas. Comp. Mand. XI. 12. πρῶτον μὲν ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος ὁ δοκῶν πνεῦμα ἔχειν ὑποὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ βέλει πρωτοκαθεδρίαν ἔχειν. The reference (Vis. III. 9) apparently intimates that those who were preeminent in the church needed to be warned against contention and the evils which dissension brings. (Comp., as to Pharisees, Mat. xxiii 6.) Prominence or eminence in the congregation is denoted by πρωτοκαθεδρίταις—see the reference in Mand. XI. 12—but it does not seem to have any exclusive bearing on official prominence. It might be social, or merely personal. In Heb. xiii. 7. 17 the word is ἡγούμενοι and seems to have a general reference to ecclesiastical rule, as probably προηγ. has here. See also Vis. II. 2; 1 Clem. 21. 6. 13. For Hermas' lists of church officials see Vis. III. 5. 1; Sim. IX. 15. 25. He sets preaching in a prominent position, especially in Sim. IX. 25.

B. II. 30. 9. Solus hic Deus invenitur, qui omnia fecit, solus omnipotens, et solus pater condens et faciens omnia, et visibilia, et invisibilia, et sensibilia, et insensata, et coelestia, et terrena, "verbo virtutis suae." (Heb. i. 3.)

B. V. 5. 1. Ὅλον γε Ἐνὼχ εὐαρεστήσας τῇ Θεῷ, ἐν σώματι μετετέθη, τὴν μετάρθειν τῶν δικαίων προμηνύων. (Heb. xi. 5.)

<sup>1</sup> Syr., Old Lat. and Mur. Can. The Epistle is not named in the Muratorian Canon; unless it be glanced at in the "forged Epistle to the Alexandrians." See note on page 7.—In the Syriac it follows Timothy and Titus, from which position some have supposed that the compilers of the Canon did not accept it as Paul's, or they would have put it before the letters to individuals. But others say that it was put there because anonymous. The Old Latin Canon contained it in Tertullian's time (see below, page 278). In the Vatican MS (cod. B) there is a peculiarity. The Epistle to the Hebrews comes after Thessalonians (as it does in 8, A, C), but in the numbers upon the leaves Gal. ends with 58, Hebrews begins with 59, and Ephesians begins with 70. It thus appears that in the exemplar from which B was copied Hebrews was so placed as to show that it was ascribed to Paul. The MS ends with Heb. ix. 11, but the section is 64.

11. TERTULLIAN.<sup>1</sup>

De pudicit. c. 20. Disciplina igitur apostolorum proprie quidem instruit ac determinat principaliter sanctitatis omnis erga templum Dei antistitem et ubique de ecclesia eradicandum omne sacrilegium pudicitiae, sine ulla restitutionis mentione. Volo tamen ex redundantia alicujus etiam comitis apostolorum testimonium superducere, idoneum confirmandi de proximo jure disciplinam magistrorum. Extat enim et Barnabae titulus ad Hebraeos, a Deo satis auctorati viri, ut quem Paulus juxta se constituerit in abstinentiae tenore: Aut ego solus et Barnabas non habemus operandi potestatem? (1 Cor. ix. 6.) Et utique receptior <sup>1</sup> Tertullian. This is the only passage in Tertullian where Hebrews is expressly quoted. It comes after a series of quotations (13-18) from the Pauline Epistles, and the Apocalypse and 1 John; to which the first words Disciplina igitur apostolorum apply. He elsewhere censures Marcion (Adv. Marc. V. 20) for excluding the Pastoral Epistles: but does not blame him for excluding Hebrews. The passage (Heb. vi. 4-8) here quoted is so much in his favour at the time (he was a Montanist when he wrote it) that his not claiming Pauline authorship or apostolical authority for the Epistle (it is by a comes apostolorum) must be regarded as specially significant. He even emphatically distinguishes between the apostolical writings (disciplina magistrorum) and this letter (which is only de proximo jure). The Muratorian Canon, the Old Latin, Irenaeus, Caius, and Tertullian show us how little favour the idea of the Pauline authorship of this Epistle found in the Western Church. On what ground Tertullian ascribed it to Barnabas is not known.

12. CAIUS (about A.D. 200).

Περὶ ἀναστάσεως (Lagarde p. 89). Διὰ τοι τοῦτο διδάσκωμεν καὶ παρεγγνώμεθα πᾶσι τοὺς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διδασκάλους ἡμῶν, πείθεσθαι αὐτοὺς καὶ ἐποκέπτειν τοῖς λόγοις αὐτῶν.

<sup>1</sup> Origen. See also the quotations from Origen pages 51, 52. Origen repeatedly quotes it as Paul’s; and says that there are fourteen Pauline Epistles. In the Epistle to Africanus (A.D. 240) he intimates that he will prove that Paul was the author. But in the passage from his Homily (after A.D. 245) quoted by Eusebius (see page 9) he says that God only knows who wrote it. This last may hold to be his mature judgement. See Westcott on the Canon p. 330. Bleek, Einl. in d. N. T., § 193. p. 592 (Mangold’s ed.). But the ὁ γράψας τὴν ἐπιστολὴν may only mean the Amanuensis. This makes Origen consistent with himself; and corresponds with the suggestion of Eusebius H. E. III. 38 (see below). Methodius (end of the third century) Bishop of Olympus in Lycia and afterwards of Tyre (Jerome) seems to have ascribed the Epistle to Paul. He wrote against Origen. See Lardner’s citation of him, and Bleek’s objections (Hebräer § 37), which last seem to be well-founded.

Adv. Jud. I. 20. Item in Regum primo: "Sterilis septem peperit, et quae plurimos habebat filios infirmata est." Filii autem septem sunt ecclesiae septem. Unde et Paulus septem Ecclesiis scripsit, et Apocalypsis Ecclesias septem ponit, ut servetur septenarius numerus.

<sup>1</sup> Cyprian. Though Cyprian had many opportunities of quoting Hebrews, he never quotes it, and he quotes all the other Pauline letters save Philemon. The passages in our text restrict Paul's letters to those addressed to seven churches i.e. Hebrews is not recognized. Along with the works of Cyprian is found a Tractatus ad Novatianum haereticum (author unknown) which does not allude to this Epistle, though its quotations from other books of scripture are numerous. So also the works of Novatian himself. Bleek (Hebräer) I. § 46.

of Eastern writers might be cited. From the fourth century it is with increasing cordiality recognized as Paul's. Thus the Laodicene Council (see before, p. 18), in the decree which may be ascribed to about this time, numbers fourteen Epistles of Paul; Gregory of Nazianzum (died 389) says δέκα δὲ Παύλου τέσσαρές τ' ἐπιστολαί. Amphilochius of Iconium, contemporary of Gregory, says that Paul wrote Hebrews, and that some who call it νόθον are men οὐκ εὖ λέγοντες· γνησία γὰρ ἡ χάρις. The Apostolical Canons count fourteen Epistles of Paul; and Basil the Great (died 379) and his brother Gregory of Nyssa distinctly ascribe it to Paul. Chrysostom (died 407) not only often quotes the Epistle as Paul's, but even discusses questions concerning it, without once alluding to any doubt of Paul being the author. See Bleek (Hebräer) I. §§ 41. 42.

Ad Paulin. de Stud. Script. (Vallars. Vol. I. c. 8. p. 278.) Paulus Apostolus ad septem Ecclesias scribit, (octava enim ad Hebraeos a plerisque extra numerum ponitur.)

Epist. ad Dardanum. (Vallars. Vol. I. c. 3. p. 965.) Illud nostris dicendum est, hanc Epistolam quae inscribitur ad Hebraeos, non solum ab Ecclesiis Orientis, sed ab omnibus retro Ecclesiasticis Graeci sermonis Scriptoribus, quasi Pauli Apostoli suscipi, licet plerique eam vel Barnabae, vel Clementis arbitrentur: et nihil interesse, cujus sit, quum Ecclesiastici viri sit, et quotidie Ecclesiarum lectione celebretur. Quod si eam Latinorum consuetudo non recipit inter Scripturas canonicas; nec Graecorum quidem Ecclesiae Apocalypsin Joannis eadem libertate suscipiunt; et tamen nos utrumque suscipimus; nequaquam hujus temporis consuetudinem, sed veterum scriptorum auctoritatem sequentes, qui plerumque utriusque abutuntur testimoniis, non ut interdum de apocryphis facere solent, quippe qui et gentilium literarum raro utantur exemplis, sed quasi canonicis et ecclesiasticis.

Comment. in Isaiae proph. iii. 6. (Vallars. Vol. IV. p. 91.) Unde et Paulus Apostolus in epistola ad Hebraeos, quam Latina consuetudo non recipit: "Nonne omnes," inquit, "ministri sunt spiritus &c.?"

In Matth. Book IV. c. 26. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 212.) Nam doubt. He usually cites the Epistle as Paul's; but often expresses a doubt; and this throughout his writings at all periods of his life. The quotation in the text from his letter to Dardanus gives a fair view of his general position. His contemporary Augustine testifies to the Pauline authorship on the whole. He was present at the Council of Carthage A.D. 397 (see before, p. 20) at which it was reckoned as Paul's, but separately from the thirteen. In one remarkable passage (see before, p. 23) he counts fourteen Epp. of Paul, without question putting Hebrews at the end. Though he does not always say the Ep. is Paul's, he does not admit doubts of it further than might be inferred from such phrases as "Epistola quae scribitur ad Hebraeos" or "Epistola ad Hebraeos." In his De Peccat. merit. et remiss. I. c. 27 he says: "Ad Hebraeos quoque epistola, quamquam nonnullis incerta sit . . . magisque me movet auctoritas Ecclesiarum Orientalium, quae hanc quoque in canonicis habent, quanta pro nobis testimonia contineat, advertendum est." et Paulus in epistola sua, quae scribitur ad Hebraeos, licet de ea multi Latinorum dubitent &c.

Comm. in Ep. ad Galat. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 374.) Unde et nos possumus intelligere, Joannem quoque baptistam et apostolum appellandum, siquidem ait scriptura: "Fuit homo missus a Deo cui nomen erat Joannes:" et in Epistola ad Hebraeos propterea Paulum solita consuetudine nec nomen suum, nec Apostoli vocabulum praeposuisse, quia de Christo erat dicturus: Habentes ergo principem Sacerdotem, et Apostolum confessionis nostrae Jesum (Heb. iii. 1; iv. 14); nec fuisse congruum, ut ubi Christus Apostolus dicendus erat, ibi etiam Paulus Apostolus poneretur.

1. CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

Strom. IV. 15. p. 606. Κατὰ τὴν ἐπιστολὴν τὴν καθολικὴν τῶν ἀποστόλων ἑπτάντων “σὺν τῇ εὐδοσίᾳ τοῦ Ἀγίου Πνεύματος” τῇ γεγραμμένῃ μὲν ἐν ταῖς Πράξεσι τῶν Ἀποστόλων, διακομισθείσῃ δὲ εἰς τοὺς πιστοὺς δι’ αὐτοῦ διακονοῦντος τοῦ Παύλου.

Eus. H. E. VI. 14. Ἐν δὲ ταῖς ὑποτυπώσειςι, ξυνελόντα εἰπεῖν, πάσης τῆς ἐνδιαθήκου γραφῆς ἐπιτετυχημένας πεποιήται διηγήσεις μηδὲ τὰς ἀντιλεγόμενας παρελθῶν τὴν Ἰούδα λέγω καὶ τὰς λοιπὰς καθολικὰς ἐπιστολάς, τὴν τε Βαρνάβα καὶ τὴν Πέτρου λεγομένην ἀποκάλυψιν.

<sup>1</sup> The origin and meaning of the term Catholic are obscure. The seven Epistles which are now so named are usually found in MSS of the New Testament after the Acts and before the Pauline Epistles. In 8 they immediately precede the Apocalypse. For much interesting information as to the relative order in which they are severally found in MSS and Catalogues see Volkmar's Anhang to Credner's Geschichte, § 196. It appears from the following extracts that Clement used the word “Catholic” to denote the general destination of the Epistle in Acts xv; and that he (or Eusebius for him) had the same meaning in view when speaking of Jude and the rest; Origen also (applying it to Barnabas and some that are Canonical) has the same meaning (see reff. in our text); and this meaning seems to have prevailed ever since. Eus. H. E. III. 3. (see before, page 207) does not necessarily give a different rendering, for ἐν καθολικοῖς παραδεδομένα may mean “handed down among Catholic Christians.” Oecumenius (Proleg. in Ep. Jacob.) says καθολικὰ λέγονται αὗται ὁνομαζέμενοι ἐγκύκλιοι, which is the same thing. The two smaller Epistles of John do not come under the name of General Epistles, but they were at an early date supposed to be general; the Elect lady and Gaius being supposed to denote the Christian Church. Photius says of Clement that his Stromateis are Interpretations “of the Epistles of the divine Paul and the Catholic Epistles.” Cassiodorus (sixth century), Div. Lit. c. 8 (see below on 2 Peter under Clem. Alex.), applies the term Epistolae canonicae to those Epistles, and this became the ordinary phrase in the Latin Church: but this seems to intimate that they are undoubtedly recognized by the Church, and does not necessarily distinguish them from Paul's. Eusebius II. E. II. 23 (see below, on James) was the first to treat them as a collection.

1. CLEMENT OF ROME.

First Epistle.

C. 10. 1, 7. Ἀβραάμ, ὁ φίλος προσαγορευθεὶς, πιστὸς εὐρέθη ἐν τῷ αὐτὸν ἐπὶ λόγον γενέσθαι τοῖς ῥήμασι τοῦ Θεοῦ. . . . Διὰ πίστιν καὶ φιλοξενίαν ἐδόθη αὐτῷ υἱὸς ἐν γῆρα, καὶ δι' ὑπακοῆς προσήνεγκεν αὐτὸν θυσίαν τῷ Θεῷ πρὸς ἓν τῶν ὁρέων ὧν ἔδειξεν αὐτῷ. (James ii. 21-23.)

C. 12. 1. Διὰ πίστιν καὶ φιλοξενίαν ἐσώθη Ῥαββὴ ἡ πόρνη. (James ii. 25; Heb. xi. 31.)

C. 17. 2. Ἐμαρτυρήθη δὲ μεγάλως Ἀβραάμ καὶ φίλος προσ-ηγορεύθη τοῦ Θεοῦ. (James ii. 23.)

C. 23. 1. Ὁ οἰκτίρων κατὰ πάντα καὶ ἐνεργητικὸς πατήρ ἔχει σπλάγχνα ἐπὶ φοβουμένους αὐτὸν, ἡπίως τε καὶ προσηκῶς τὰς χάριτας αὐτοῦ ἀποδοῖ τοῖς προσερχομένοις αὐτῷ ἀπλῆ δια-

<sup>1</sup> This Epistle was accepted in the Eastern Church from the first. It is in the Peshito version; but not in the Muratorian list; and not in the majority of MSS of the Old Latin. The references given from Clem. Rom. are not very secure, although some of them (especially perhaps c. 17. 2) may be kept in mind. It seems impossible to doubt that Hermas had it in view; and the first passage from Irenaeus is significant. About Origen there can be no doubt whatever as regards the Epistle, although doubt may be thrown on the passages which identify its writer with the Lord's brother, inasmuch as they are only in the Latin of Rufinus. Nothing can be made of Tertullian: but on the other hand Hippolytus, in his solitary quotation, is significantly explicit. Eusebius tells as a matter of fact that some counted it spurious, and that there was a lack of early testimony to it; but he himself quotes it as Apostolic. He seems to have believed that there were three of the name of James, famous in the early Church. This is a subject much discussed, on which this is not the place to enter. It is more to our purpose to draw the student's attention to the correspondence between James and the Sermon on the Mount; and between James and 1 Peter. This twofold relation seems to point to James being one of those who saw and heard the Lord in the flesh. Both James and 1 Peter were addressed to the Jews of the dispersion; and some have attributed to this fact the slowness of the Christian Churches, especially in the West, to receive them. Perhaps in those days, as at the Reformation, its doctrine was supposed to conflict with that of St Paul. Luther could not endure it. He called it "straw."

The Latin of his works is regarded by some with suspicion. The translator had a way of inserting expletives and titles. The Greek is explicit as regards the Epistle of James: it is only in the Latin that we find James called the Lord's brother.

XXIX.

(COMPARE SECTIONS I-III. XI. XXVII.)

<sup>1</sup> This Epistle of Peter (which Jerome is singular in supposing to have been written in Hebrew) has sufficient testimony in its favour to show its acceptance in the early church. The words of 2 Peter iii. 1 may be considered the earliest of all. The silence of the Muratorian fragment does not outweigh the positive testimony in its favour of the Old Latin and of Irenaeus and Tertullian. And the Eastern Church gives its witness in the Syrian Canon. Critical opinion is found in Origen's words. Modern objections are therefore mainly founded on internal grounds. Semler led the way in doubting that Peter wrote it; and disputed c. V. 13, 14. Cludius (A.D. 1808) ascribed it to a disciple of Paul's. Eichhorn and De Wette followed in this view. Schwegler made an elaborate indictment against it as an apology for Paulinism addressed to the Petrine party, and intended to serve as a ground of mediation or compromise between the Petrine and Pauline sections of the divided church. He ascribed its date to the time of the persecution by Trajan. There is an able article by Weiss (Stud. u. Krit. 1865, p. 619) in reply to all who give it a later date than A.D. 54. Weiss seeks to prove that 1 Peter was written at an earlier period than Paul's circular letter (Ephesians). See also a full discussion in small compass by Brückner in De Wette's Kurzgef. Handb. d. N. T. (1865) p. 19. Hilgenfeld (Einl. p. 627) has a statement of characteristic force and clearness in which he refuses to accept the Epistle as merely a mediation between Petrine and Pauline Christians, but concludes (with the Tübingen School generally) that it was written from Rome during Trajan's persecution, and also that its author was a man who used Paul's Epistles, and James, and Hebrews. The principle on which all those modern objections go is, that the admitted similarity of this Epistle to some of Paul's and to James marks it out as a forgery. But the coincidences of thought only demonstrate the harmony of doctrine pervading the N. T. No imitator of Paul would have written an Epistle which passed by without explicit mention the doctrine of Justification by Faith; nor would a follower of James have dwelt so much on doctrine. That the Epistle blends doctrine and practice as no other does, with a sympathy founded on experience of the lights and shadows of a believer's life, is beyond dispute, and has been its attraction to penitent believers in all ages; but it is too deep and original and unique to be the work of any imitator or subordinate. Again: the ethical passages (such as c. iii. 8, comp. Rom. xii. 10; c. ii. 13, comp. Rom. xiii. 1), on which some found for proof of imitation, may really be traced to the words of the Master Himself. The student may compare c. i. 5 with Gal. iii. 23; c. ii. 6, 7 with Rom. ix. 23; c. ii. 11 with James iv. 1; c. ii. 13 with Rom. xiii. 1; c. iii. 9 with Rom. xii. 17; c. iii. 18 with Rom. vi. 9, 10; c. iii. 21 with Rom. vi. 4; c. iv. 1 with 2 Cor. v. 15 and Rom. vi. 7; c. iv. 10. 11 with Rom. xii. 6, 7; c. 5. 1 with Rom. viii. 18. As regards Hebrews, 1 Pet. i. 2 repeats Heb. xii. 24; but the other passages do not suffice to establish a connection. As regards James, 1 Pet. i. 1 may be compared (and partly contrasted) with James i. 1; c. i. 6, 7 with James i. 2-4; c. i. 23-25 with James 1, 18; c. iv. 8 with James v. 20. There are some coincidences of expression which seem to imply more than harmony of thought, and require us to suppose either that they were common phrases in Apostolic circles, or that one of the Apostles had seen the other's works. If the latter supposition he adopted, it is not easy to say which had the priority.

Vis. III. 11. 3. Ὡςπερ γὰρ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, μηκέτι ἔχοντες ἐλπίδα τοῦ ἀνανεῶσαι, οὐδὲν ἄλλο προσδοκῶσιν εἰ μὴ τὴν κοίμησιν αὐτῶν, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς μαλακισθέντες ἀπὸ τῶν βιωτικῶν πραγμάτων παρεδώκατε ἑαυτοὺς εἰς τὰς ἀκηδίας, καὶ οὐκ ἐπεὶ ῥήψατε ἑαυτῶν τὰς μερίμνας ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον· ἀλλὰ ἐθραύσθη ὑμῶν ἡ διάνοια, καὶ ἐπαλαιώθητε ταῖς λύπαις ὑμῶν. (1 Pet. v. 7.)

Vis. IV. 2. 4. Καλῶς ἐξέφυγες, φησὶν, ὅτι τὴν μερίμνάν σου ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν ἐπέρριψας. (1 Pet. v. 7.)

Vis. IV. 3. 4. Τὸ δὲ χρυσοῦν μέρος ἡμεῖς ἔστὲ οἱ ἐκφυγόντες τὸν κόσμον τοῦτον. Ὡςπερ γὰρ τὸ χρυσίον δοκιμάζεται διὰ τοῦ πυρὸς καὶ εὐχρηστον γίνεται, οὕτως καὶ ἡμεῖς δοκιμάζεσθε οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐν αὐτῷ. Οἱ οὖν μείναντες καὶ πυρωθέντες ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, καθαρισθήσεσθε. Ὡςπερ τὸ χρυσίον ἀποβάλλει τὴν σκωρίαν αὐτοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀποβαλεῖτε πᾶσαν λύπην καὶ στενοχωρίαν καὶ καθαρισθήσεσθε καὶ χρήσιμοι ἔσεσθε εἰς τὴν οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ πύργου. (1 Pet. i. 7.)

Ὑμεῖς δὲ οἱ πάσχοντες ἕνεκεν τοῦ ὀνόματος δοξάζειν ὀφείλετε τὸν Θεόν, ὅτι ἀξίους ὑμᾶς ἡγάγατο ὁ Θεὸς ἵνα τοῦτο τὸ ὄνομα βαστάζητε, καὶ πᾶσαι ὑμῶν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ἰαθῶσιν. (1 Pet. iv. 13, 16.)

Sim. IX. 28. 6. Οὐκοῦν μακαρίζετε ἑαυτοὺς· ἀλλὰ δοκεῖτε ἔργον μέγα πεποιημένα, εἰάν τις ὑμῶν διὰ τὸν Θεὸν πάθῃ, ζῶν ὑμῖν ὁ Κύριος χαρίζεται, καὶ οὐ νοεῖτε· αἱ γὰρ ἁμαρτίαι ὑμῶν κατεβέβησαν, καὶ εἰ μὴ πεπόνθατε ἕνεκεν τοῦ ὀνόματος Κυρίου, διὰ τὰς ἁμαρτίας ὑμῶν τεθνήκατε ἂν τῷ Θεῷ. Μιμηταὶ οὖν γενώμεθα τῆς ὑπομονῆς αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐὰν πάσχωμεν διὰ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, δοξάζωμεν αὐτόν. Τοῦτον γὰρ ἡμῖν τὸν ὑπογραμμὸν ἔθηκε δι' ἑαυτοῦ, καὶ ἡμεῖς τοῦτο ἐπιστεύσαμεν. Eus. H. E. III. 39. Κέχρηται δ' αὐτὸς μαρτυρίαις ὁ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰωάννου προτέρας ἐπιστολῆς, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Πέτρου ὁμοίως.

knew 1 Peter it was at the end of his life, after A.D. 207, and in a Greek form. Regarding the controversy on the genuineness of Tertullian's Adv. Jud. and Scorpiace, see Semler's edition of Tertullian, Vol. V. p. 212; Neander's Antignosticus, p. 530 (Bohn's Transl.); Kaye's Tertullian, Pref. to second edition; and Rönsch, Das N. T. Tertullians, p. 556. To pronounce all those treatises (or the parts of them, as Adv. Jud. c. 10 or De Orat. c. 20) spurious is a violent proceeding, which the facts do not justify. Retaining them, however, we have evidence that Tertullian knew and used 1 Peter. That on other occasions he omitted it, where we should have expected quotations, shows that he did not always accept it without reserve. The passage from De Orat. c. 20 is conclusive, and is too well supported not to be genuine.

<sup>1</sup> Origen. Lardner (amending Huet) notes that the reading was προῦ for Πέτρου, not πρώτης, so that there is not implied reference to a second Epistle. See p. 8 for double reference. Origen often quotes 1 Peter. See Lardner I. p. 539; but Lardner—inasmuch as there is no Greek quotation of "the First Epistle" as such,—supposes that in the Latin (as in next extract) we owe the form of re-

XXX.

<sup>1</sup> The earliest quotation from this Epistle is probably that in 2 Clement. Justin's apparent references are worthy of notice, and so also are those of Irenaeus. Clement of Alexandria commented on the Epistle. Origen's testimony may be ambiguous, as it is said to be, but it is scarcely possible that even Rufinus, when paraphrasing his original, would invent so many distinct passages as are found in his Latin version of Origen. See text, p. 52, and references in this chapter. It appears to have been an admitted part of Scripture in Origen's time, although what Eus. H. E. VI. 25 ascribes to him is not less likely to be correct: "Ἐστὼ δὲ καὶ δευτέραν, ἀμφιβάλλεται γάρ. This is not a statement of opinion, but the record of a matter of fact. Eusebius mentions the wide circulation of the Epistle, and the doubts of its canonicity, without meeting the difficulties involved; but Jerome argues on the subject. From his day to ours the Epistle has been generally received, but (at least from the Reformation) with some doubts on the part of many. Reuss and Hilgenfeld reject it. See Brückner's Commentary in De Wette's Exeget. Handb.

The similarity of 2 Peter to Jude has occasioned suspicion of the genuineness of both, and also much controversy as to the relative priority of the two Epistles. The passages Jude 3-16 and 2 Pet. ii. 1-19 are too like to admit of denial that the one writer had the other in view. On the whole, it seems that there is a directness and explicitness about Jude which make it likely that he was first: but although the same illustrations are in both Epistles, the object in view is not the same. The treatment of the illustrations is accordingly different and independent. There is no imitation or servile copying. Compare the different use of ὑπέροχτα with and without ματαιότητος, Jude 6 and 2 Pet. ii. 18; and see συνενωχούμενοι, Jude 12 and 2 Pet. ii. 13. Both of the Epistles must have been written at an early date in the history of the Church. See how Jude 17, 18, uses the prediction also found in 2 Pet. iii. 3. The immediate Parousia is implied in both, though Jude does not mention it. This makes for the genuineness of both letters. The disappointment of that expectation was such as to have prevented a forger (say in the second century) from recalling it; and the expression of the strong hope of the Church is characteristic of the apostolic age. In 1 Clem. c. 23 and 2 Clem. c. 11 we have the expectations of a later time dealt with; and a singular quotation (called γραφή and προφητικὸς λόγος) is applied in both cases. But the position of the writers of 2 Peter and Jude is quite different from that of Clement and of the preacher of the Homily called "2 Clement." When critics attempt to fix a date after the Fall of Jerusalem for our Epistles they do not succeed.

If Peter wrote both Epistles, the time which had passed in the interval had made a change in the circumstances of the persons addressed. In the first he speaks of external assaults, in the second the danger is from within. It is not yet from Gnostic or theosophic speculations: it is practical libertinism, lawlessness. The first Epistle is altogether more Jewish than the second. The Churches addressed have increased more in Gentile than in Jewish adherents since the first Epistle, so exclusively Jewish in its tone, was penned; and the change thus brought about goes far to account for the difference in the relation to the Old Testament in the two Epistles. It is a difference in degree. The Old Testament

C. 16. 3. Γινώσκετε δὲ ὅτι ἔρχεται ἡ δὴ ἡμέρα τῆς κρίσεως ὡς κλίβανος καιόμενος, καὶ τακίσονται τινες τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ πᾶσα ἡ γῆ ὡς μόλιβος ἐπὶ πυρὶ τηρόμενος· καὶ τότε φανήσεται τὰ κρύφια καὶ φανερά ἔργα τῶν ἀνθρώπων. (Comp. 2 Pet. ii. 9; iii. 7.)

is still appealed to; but the whole tone and substance are less peculiarly Jewish. We may also note that there are in this second Epistle several points of resemblance to the Pastoral Epistles of Paul. See the use of εὐσέβεια. Paul seems to have been still alive (iii. 15). The chief difficulty in holding the Petrine authorship of both Epistles lies in the apparently different persons addressed, while yet the second claims to be written to the same persons (iii. 1). But on the whole we may hold that the growth of the Church accounts for the degree of difference: the "strangers of the Diaspora" in the first letter are the "equally favoured Christians" of the second; and the object of both Epistles is that grace and peace may be multiplied (1 Pet. i. 2; 2 Pet. i. 2). But in the second there is the necessity of seeking that increase of grace and peace by promoting true knowledge (ἐπίγνωσις) of the Personal God and the Saviour. (See Weiss on this Epistle in Stud. u. Krit. for 1866, p. 255 &c.)

<sup>1</sup> Barnabas. In Barnabas, c. 2, 3 an echo of 2 Pet. i. 6 may be found; and in c. 15, 4 (ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα παρ' αὐτῷ χίλια ἔτη) a ground of comparison with 2 Pet. iii. 8. The application of the words is quite different in this last case. Comp. Ps. xc. 4. See below in passages from Justin and Irenaeus.

<sup>1</sup> Clement. In Clement there are several passages which have been cited as references to 2 Peter. But they are rather parallels than citations. Thus c. 7. 1 (2 Pet. i. 12-iii. 9); c. 7. 5 (2 Pet. ii. 5); c. 9. 2 (2 Pet. i. 17); c. 11. 1 (2 Pet. ii. 6, 7, 9); c. 23. 1 (2 Pet. iii. 3, 4).

So also it will be at the last time; there shall be a flood of fire, and the earth shall be burnt up together with its mountains, and men shall be burnt up together with the idols which they have made, and with the graven images which they have worshipped; and the sea together with its isles shall be burnt; and the just shall be delivered from the fury, like their fellows in the ark from the waters of the deluge. (2 Pet. iii. 10, 12.)

1. BARNABAS.

C. 5. 10. (11). Εἰ γὰρ μὴ ἦλθεν ἐν σαρκί, πῶς ἂν ἐσώθησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι βλέποντες αὐτόν. . . . (See 1 John iv. 2.)

<sup>1</sup> The First Epistle of John stands or falls with the Fourth Gospel, which it resembles so closely. Scaliger said in an offhand way: Tres Epistolae Joannis non sunt Apostoli Joannis. J. E. Lange (1797) was the first to formulate a doubt of the authenticity of the Epistle while, curiously enough, maintaining that the Gospel and the Apocalypse are by John. He alleged that it is not genuine, because there is nothing personal or individual or local about it; because it is suspiciously like the work of an imitator of the author of the Gospel; and because it is a great falling-off from the power of the Gospel (see Lücke, III. p. 10). He farther alleged that if the last is said to be due to John's writing it in extreme old age, there is a difficulty raised at once, because in that case it must have been written after the Fall of Jerusalem, while ii. 18 is evidently written before that catastrophe. Bretschneider held that the three Epistles go together, that they are the work of John the Presbyter; and that the doctrine of the Logos and the anti-doketic teaching are of the second century. Bleek denies that the Epistle is anti-doketic; and supposes it to be intended to arrest apostacy which arose from no very definite principles. The history of the fortunes of the Epistle is told in full detail by Lücke in his 'Commentar über die Schriften des Evangelisten Johannes,' Vol. III. In answer to the arguments quoted above it may suffice to say here that the unprejudiced reader is not likely to agree with Lange's objections; and that, since Bretschneider wrote, the most recent enquiries have brought into prominence the existence of the Logos-doctrine in Justin, and so confirmed the statement of Irenaeus (B. III. 11. 1) that Cerinthus, a Dokete, was a contemporary of the Apostle John. Tertullian (De carne Christi c. 24) and Dion. Alex. (Eus. II. E. VII. 25) believed that Doketae were in view.

The Greek church regarded the Epistle as written in Ephesus, and designed to meet the wants of the churches around. It was probably written after the Gospel: its opening words at all events naturally suggest that order. There is indeed everything to make one suppose that it was written as an outline of Christian doctrine founded on, or flowing from, the Gospel, and therefore not only subsequent to the Gospel but a companion document. There has been much conjecture as to Augustine's statement that it was written ad Parthos. And the conjectures do not clear up the mystery. It seems to have been a slip of Augustine's or of his amanuensis. Clem. Alex. says 2 John was written πρὸς παρθέτους; and this may have in some way originated the mistake.

But apart from all such questions, the external evidence suffices to show that this Epistle had an early place in the undoubting acceptance of the Church. Polycarp, and Papias and the Muratorian Fragment, and the Peshito and Old Latin Versions, and Irenaeus, and Clement, and Origen, make a chain which it is not possible to break. The Alogi probably rejected it (though the words of Epiphanius Haer. LI. 3 do not expressly say so), and Marcion certainly did reject it. But so far as the testimony of antiquity goes, this Epistle is beyond dispute the work of the Evangelist, John the Apostle.

Ibid. c. 7. 1. Πᾶς γὰρ, ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, Ἀντίχριστός ἐστι. Καὶ ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ σταυροῦ ἐκ τοῦ διαβόλου ἐστίν· καὶ ὃς ἂν μεθοδεύῃ τὰ λόγια τοῦ Κυρίου πρὸς τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, καὶ λέγῃ μήτε ἀνάστασιν μήτε κρίσιν εἶναι, οὗτος πρωτότοκος ἐστὶ τοῦ Σατανᾶ. (1 John iv. 3; also 2 John 7.)

<sup>1</sup> Ignatius. Compare as echo: Magnes. 6. 1. ὃς πρὸ αἰώνων παρὰ πατρί (1 John i. 2). It is not at all made out that John connected the coming of Christ with the Destruction of Jerusalem. The spiritual Antichrist is always in John's mind. And the arguments founded on 1 John ii. 18 as to the date of the Epistle (see note 1 on the Epistle) being insecure, and "the last time" having a mainly spiritual reference in the Epistle of John, this reference in Ignatius (which seems to contemplate a coming visible judgement) cannot be connected with John.

(COMPARE SECTIONS I. II., ESPECIALLY II.)

<sup>1</sup> These two Epistles have not John's name; nor any external mark by which to make their author known to us. The very fact that he calls himself ὁ πρεσβύτερος shows that he was well known, so well known as to need no further description. If the letters be genuine they must have come from some one of high reputation; one in whose case the name of "Elder," which so many men might officially claim, had become a special term of affectionate respect. One can understand how it would be appropriate to the Apostle John in Ephesus, in his old age, the last living link between those who were with the Lord in the flesh and the men whose grandfathers were children when Christ died. This fact is the chief difficulty in the way of ascribing these letters to John the Presbyter. It is scarcely possible that if there ever was a Presbyter John, who stood so far out of the reach of being mistaken for some other man that he could use only this designation 'Presbyter' without needing to add his name, his fame would have passed away leaving only vague and doubtful traces, not so much in the reminiscences of his contemporaries as in the half-imaginary historical notes of later ages. It is not in Papias's jottings nor in Irenaeus's obscure references to one greater than himself, but in Eusebius's suppositions, that we find the basis of the fame of Presbyter John. There is no good reason to substitute this half-mythical John for the Evangelist as the writer of the two smaller Epistles. Polycarp perhaps quotes one of them; Irenaeus certainly does, and the Muratorian Canon mentions more than one Epistle, though the reading is obscure.

There has been controversy about the persons addressed. Is it in each case a person whom "the Presbyter" loved in truth? That the second Epistle was sent to the Church generally is not compatible with the salutations from the "children of her sister." That it was a salutation from one church to another is possible, but the words of the first verse, which seem to speak of her as an individual who shared with the writer and others the privilege of having truth abiding in her, make it improbable. If a person, then ἐκλεκτή is most naturally taken as descriptive, both in her case and her sister's. Ἐκλεκτή is not a proper name but a designation. But was her name Κυρία? or does Κυρία mean "lady"? On the whole, the balance of probability is in favour of the latter supposition; although the conclusion is easily opposed, and cannot be proved. Of Gaius, to whom the third Epistle was addressed, nothing is known. Attempts to identify him with Gaius of Macedonia (Acts xix. 29), or with Gaius of Derbe (Acts xx. 4), or with Gaius of Corinth (Rom. xvi. 23; 1 Cor. i. 14), are beyond the sphere of historical inquiry.

Both Epistles seem to have been written when the writer was on the eve of a journey in course of which he would meet his friend. Eusebius (H. E. III. 25) says that the Apostle John made tours of visitation of the churches, and this harmonizes with the tradition that those letters were written by the aged Apostle after his return from Patmos, and at a time when he superintended the churches of Asia.

It is to be observed that although Dionysius opposed the reception of the Apocalypse, and ascribed it to Presbyter John, he never ascribes the second and third Epistles to that Presbyter, even although the opening words ὁ πρεσβύτερος might have suggested it. Nay, he refers to the 'Presbyter' being written anonymously at the opening of those Epistles, as though it were characteristic of John.

<sup>1</sup> Barnabas uses παρεῖδυσιν, c. 2. 10 and c. 4. 9, so as to remind the reader of Jude 4 παρεσέδυσαν, in similarly describing the stealthy inroads of false doctrine. The word in 2 Pet. ii. 1 is παρεισάξουσιν. Comp. Gal. ii. 4, παρεισέλθον, παρεισάχτους. In c. 4. 9 it is ἵνα μὴ σχῇ παρεῖδυσιν ὁ μέλας, and the context shows that he is warning against false doctrine and sins of conduct as closely linked together. So also the Pastoral Epistles.

8. TERTULLIAN.

De cultu femin. I. 3.<sup>1</sup> Scio scripturam Enoch, quae hunc ordinem angelis dedit, non recipi a quibusdam, quia nec in armarium Judaicum<sup>2</sup> admittitur. Opinor non putaverunt illam ante cataclysmum editam, post cum casum orbis omnium rerum abolitorem, salvam esse potuisse. Si ista ratio est, recordentur pronepotem ipsius Enoch fuisse superstitem cataclysmi Noë, qui utique domestico nomine et hereditaria traditione audierat et meminerat de proavi sui penes Deum gratia, et de omnibus praedicatis ejus: cum Enoch filio suo Matusalae nihil aliud mandaverit, quam ut notitiam eorum posteris suis traderet. Igitur sine dubio potuit Noë in praedicationis delegatione successisse, vel quia et alias non tacuisset, tam de Dei conservatoris sui dispositione, quam de ipsa domus suae gloria. Hoc si non tam expedite haberet, illud quoque assertionem scripturae illius tueretur. Perinde potuit abolefactam eam violentia cataclysmi, in spiritu rursus reformare: quemadmodum et Hierosolymis Babylonia expugnatione deletis, omne instrumentum Judaicae literaturae per Esdram constat restauratum. Sed cum Enoch eadem scriptura etiam de Domino praedicarit, a nobis quidem nihil omnino rejiciendum est, quod pertineat ad nos. Et legimus omnem scripturam aedificationi habilem divinitus inspirari. A Judaeis potest jam videri propterea rejecta, sicut et caetera fere quae Christum sonant. Nec utique mirum hoc, si scripturas aliquas non receperunt de eo locutas, quem et ipsum coram loquentem non erant recepturi. Eo accedit, quod Enoch apud Judam apostolum testimonium possidet.<sup>3</sup> (Jude 14.)

Tertullian is the only father who gives it a place as Scripture, but it was well known to Clem. of Alex. and Origen, and apparently to Justin and Irenaeus. Some count it a Jewish Book written before the Christian era; others regard it as Christian. The most common view is an obvious compromise, viz., that it is of Jewish origin B. C. and considerably interpolated afterwards.

<sup>1</sup> Jerome is arguing against those who objected to Paul's quotation from heathen writers, Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεύσται (Titus i. 12); and his argument is that one who finds some words in a book which suit his purpose and uses them is not thereby made responsible for the rest of the book.

<sup>1</sup> Barnabas. Compare as echoes: C. 7. 10 (ποθήρη), Apoc. i. 13; and c. 7. 10 also for reference to Christ's coming again as in Apoc. i. 7; c. 21. 3 (ἐγγὺς ὁ Κύριος καὶ ὁ μισθὸς αὐτοῦ), Apoc. xxii. 10, 12.

<sup>1</sup> Hermas. The correspondence of Hermas with the Apocalypse of John is remarkable. Part of it may be ascribed to Jewish sympathies, as e.g. the references to Michael (Sim. VIII. 3. 3, Apoc. xii. 7), the pre-eminent angels (Vis. V. 4. 1, Apoc. vii. 2) (which are six in Hermas, but the seventh is the spirit or son of God, who is also identified with Michael), the prominence given to the destructive powers of locusts (Vis. IV. 1. 6, Apoc. ix. 3), the delivery of a book containing the revelation (Vis. II. 4. 2, Apoc. x. 2. 8); all of which are found in Jewish prophecy and Apocalypses, and which might therefore be expected in two such books proceeding from a common source in Judaism. But there are others in which one borrows from the other, and in which the correspondence is not explained by referring both to Daniel; and the mode of borrowing is significant. It is not so much leading ideas as the accessories of those ideas which are borrowed. We find in Hermas that there is a book of life in which some names are written down and from which some are blotted out (Vis. I. 3. 2, Sim. IX. 24. 4, comp. Exod. xxxii. 32, Dan. xii. 1; but see Apoc. iii. 5, xiii. 8, xx. 12), there is an altar on which prayers are presented before God's throne (Mand. X. 3. 2, Sim. VIII. 2. 5, Apoc. viii. 3), the church is built on Apostles and Bishops (Vis. III. 5, Apoc. XXI. 14), the church is a woman (Vis. II. 4. 1, Apoc. xii. 1), a virgin (Vis. IV. 2. 1, Apoc. xxi. 2, and Hegesippus in Eus. H. E. III. 32), the beast had crowns (Vis. IV. 1. 10, Apoc. xiii. 1), and there is great tribulation coming (Vis. II. 2. 7, Apoc. vii. 14). · Salvation is only through one great and holy name (Vis. IV. 2. 4, Acts iv. 12, Apoc. xii. 11), and the East is the sacred recess of the universal sacred place (Vis. I. 4. 1, Apoc. vii. 2). The central theology of Hermas (see Introduction, Hermas) is that of the New Testament; much of the ethical teaching is that of James or of John; but the accessories are from the prophecies of the O. T. and from the Apocalypse, which is so full of O. T. prophecy and figure.

et conversus vidi septem candelabra aurea, et inter candelabra similem filio hominis indutum poderem, et cinctum ad mammas zonam auream. Caput autem ejus et capilli albi, quemadmodum lana alba, quomodo nix; et oculi ejus ut flamma ignis, et pedes ejus similes chalcolibano, quemadmodum in camino succensus est. Et vox ejus quasi vox aquarum, et habet stellas septem in manu dextera sua, et de ore ejus romphaea ex utraque parte acuta exibat, et facies ejus quemadmodum sol fulgens in virtute sua." (Apoc. i. 12, &c.)

B. V. 26. 1. Manifestius adhuc etiam de novissimo tempore, et de his qui sunt in eo decem regibus, in quos dividetur quod nunc regnat imperium, significavit Joannes Domini discipulus in Apocalypsi, edisserens quae fuerint decem cornua, quae a Daniele visa sunt, dicens sic dictum esse sibi: "Et decem cornua quae vidisti, decem reges sunt, qui regnum nondum acceperunt, sed potestatem quasi reges una hora accipient cum bestia. Hi unam sententiam habent, et virtutem et potestatem suam bestiae dant. Hi cum agno pugnabunt, et agnus vincet eos, quoniam Dominus Dominorum est, et rex regum." (Apoc. xvii. 12, &c.)

B. V. 30. 3. Οὐδὲ γὰρ πρὸ πολλοῦ χρόνου ἐωράθη, ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν ἐπὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας γενεᾶς, πρὸς τῷ τέλει τῆς Λομετιανοῦ ἀρχῆς.

<sup>1</sup> Theophilus, as Bishop of Antioch, gives the testimony of the Syrian church. Hermogenes was an opponent of Montanism. The book was in such esteem that it could be quoted as an authority. (See Lücke, Einl. in d. Offenb. c. V. § 32.)

<sup>1</sup> Caius. It appears that Caius was an Anti-Montanist opponent of the Apocalypse, and denied that it was the work of the Apostle John, ascribing it on the contrary to Cerinthus. That Cerinthus wrote an Apocalypse is not said by other writers of the period. Theodoret (Fab. Haeret. 2. 3) says: Κήρινθος καὶ ἀποκαλύψει τινὰς ὡς αὐτὸς τεθεσμένος ἐπλάσαστο, καὶ ἀπειλῶν τινῶν διδασκαλίας συνέστηκε, καὶ ποῦ Κυρίου τὴν βασιλείαν ἔφησεν ἐπίγειον ἔσεσθαι, κ.τ.λ. But this obscure statement is not accepted, seeing it seems to be founded on a misconception of Eusebius. 'Visions' put forth as though 'written by a great Apostle'—that is Caius's description of the Johannine Apocalypse, which (from the necessities of controversy) he ascribes to Cerinthus.

<sup>2</sup> Dionysius argues that the Book cannot be by the Apostle John, because it is not the custom of that John to name himself in his writings, while the seer of the Apocalypse does often and emphatically name himself. He also founds

στολῆς μαθεῖν ἔστιν, ἐν ᾗ τοῦτον ἱστορεῖ τρόπον· “Καὶ τῷ Ἰωάννῃ καὶ ὁμοίως ἀποκαλύπτεται. Καὶ ἐδόθη γὰρ αὐτῷ, φησί, στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα καὶ βλασφημίαν, καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἔξουσία καὶ μῆρες τεσσαράκοντα δύο. Ἀμφότερα δὲ ἔστιν ἐπὶ Οὐαλεριανοῦ θανατώσαι.” (Αποκ. xiii. 5.)

Ibid. VII. 24. (Occasion of Dionysius writing on the Apocalypse.) Ἐπὶ τοῖτοις ἡλιασιν σπονδάζεται αὐτῷ καὶ τὰ περὶ ἐπαγγελιῶν δύο συγγράμματα. Ἡ δὲ ἐπόθεσις αὐτῷ Νέπως ἦν ἐπίσκοπος τῶν κατ’ Αἴγυπτον, Ἰουδαϊκώτερον τὰς ἐπηγγελμένας τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐν ταῖς θείαις γραφαῖς ἐπαγγελίας ἀποδοθήσεσθαι διδάσκων, καὶ τινα χιλιάδα ἐτῶν τρυφῆς σωματικῆς ἐπὶ τῆς ξηρᾶς ταύτης ἔσσεσθαι ὑποτιθέμενος. Δόξας γοῦν οὗτος ἐκ τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰωάννου τὴν ἰδίαν κρατύνειν ἐπόληψιν, ἔλεγχον ἀλλιγοριστῶν, λόγον τινὰ περὶ τούτου συντάξας ἐπέγραψε. Πρὸς ὃν ὁ Διονύσιος ἐν τοῖς περὶ ἐπαγγελιῶν ἐνίσταται, διὰ μὲν τοῦ προτέρου τὴν αὐτοῦ γνώμην ἦν εἶχε περὶ τοῦ δόγματος παρατιθέμενος, διὰ δὲ τοῦ δευτέρου περὶ τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰωάννου διαλαμβάνων· ἔνθα τοῦ Νέπωτος κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν μνημονεύσας, ταῦτα περὶ αὐτοῦ γράφει, κ.τ.λ.<sup>2</sup>

Ibid. VII. 25. (Dionysius disagrees with those who would set the Apocalypse aside.) Εἰθ’ ἑξῆς ἐποβὰς περὶ τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰωάννου ταῦτά φησι· “Τινὲς μὲν οἷν τῶν πρὸ ἡμῶν ἠθέτησαν καὶ ἀνεσεύχασαν πάντῃ τὸ βιβλίον, καθ’ ἕναστον κεφάλαιον διενθύνοντες, ἄγνωστον τε καὶ ἀσυλλόγιστον ἀποφαίνοντες, ψεύδεσθαι τε τὴν ἐπιγραφὴν. Ἰωάννου γὰρ οὐκ εἶναι λέγουσιν· ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ Ἀποκάλυψιν εἶναι, τὴν σφόδρα καὶ παχεὶ κεκαλυμμένην τῷ τῆς ἀγνοίας παραπετάσματι· καὶ οὐχ ὅπως τῶν ἀποστόλων τινὰ, ἀλλ’ οὐδ’ ὅλως τῶν ἁγίων ἢ τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τούτου γεγονέναι ποιητὴν τοῦ συγγράμματος· Κίρινθον δὲ τὸν καὶ ἀπ’ ἐκείνου κληθεῖσαν Κιρινθιασὴν συστησόμενον αἵρεσιν, ἀξιόπιστον ἐπιφημίσαι θελίσαντα τῷ ἑαυτοῦ πλάσματι ὄνομα. Τοῦτο γὰρ εἶναι τῆς διδασκαλίας αὐτοῦ τὸ δόγμα, ἐπίγειον ἔσσεσθαι τὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ βασιλείαν, καὶ ὧν αὐτὸς ὠρέγετο φιλοσώματος ὧν καὶ πάνε σαρ-

on the difference in style and thought—especially on the different character of the Greek—and indeed anticipates most of the modern objections on internal grounds. He ascribes the composition to the other John whose tomb is in Ephesus.

κικλός, ἐν τούτοις ὀνειροπολεῖν ἔσεσθαι, γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ γαστέρα πλησμοναῖς, ταυτέστι σιτίοις καὶ ποτοῖς καὶ γάμοις, καὶ δι' ὧν εὐφρηνότερον ταῦτα ῥήθι ποιεῖσθαι, ἑορταῖς καὶ θυσίαις καὶ ἱερείων σφραγαῖς. Ἐγὼ δὲ ἀθετήσαι μὲν οὐκ ἂν τολμήσαιμι τὸ βιβλίον, πολλῶν αὐτὸ διὰ σπουδῆς ἐχόντων ἀδελφῶν, μείζονα δὲ τῆς ἑμαυτοῦ σρονήσεως τὴν ἐπόληψιν τὴν περὶ αὐτοῦ λαμβάνων, κεκρυμμένην εἶναι τινα καὶ θαυμασιωτέραν τὴν καθ' ἑκαστον ἐκδοχὴν ἐπολαμβάνω. Καὶ γὰρ εἰ μὴ συνέμιμ, ἀλλ' ἵπποκοῶ γε τῶν τινα βαθύτερον ἐγγεῖσθαι τοῖς ὅγμασιν. Οὐκ ἰδίῳ ταῦτα μετρῶν καὶ κρίνων λογισμῷ, πίστει δὲ τὸ πλεον νέμων, ἐψηλότερα ἢ ἐπ' ἑμοῦ καταληφθῆναι νερόμικτα· καὶ οὐκ ἀποδοκιμάζω ταῦτα ἃ μὴ συνεώρακα θαυμάζω δὲ μᾶλλον ὅτι μὴ καὶ εἶδον.”

(John the Son of Zebedee never names himself, but this John names himself often.) Ἐπὶ τούτοις τὴν ὅλην τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως βασιάνσας γραφὴν, ἀδύνατον δὲ αὐτὴν κατὰ τὴν πρόχειρον ἀποδείξας ροεῖσθαι διάνοιαν, ἐπιφέρει λέγων· “Συντελέσας δὴ πᾶσαν, ὡς εἶπεῖν, τὴν προφητείαν, μακαρίζει ὁ προφήτης τοὺς τε φιλάσσοντας αὐτὴν, καὶ δι' αὐτὴν καὶ ἑαυτὸν. Μακάριος γὰρ φησιν ὁ τηρῶν τοὺς λόγους τῆς προφητείας τοῦ βιβλίου τούτου· Καγὼ Ἰωάννης ὁ βλέπων καὶ ἀκούων ταῦτα. Καλεῖσθαι μὲν οὖν αὐτὸν Ἰωάννην, καὶ εἶναι τὴν γραφὴν Ἰωάννου ταύτην, οὐκ ἂν τερω. Ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ φερομένη Ἰωάννου καὶ τρίτῃ, καὶ τοὶ βραχείαις οὖσαις ἐπιστολαῖς, ὁ Ἰωάννης ὀνομαστί πρόκειται, ἀλλ' ἀνωνύμως ὁ πρεσβύτερος γέγραπται. Οὗτος δὲ γε οὐδὲ αὐταρχες ἐνόμισεν, εἰσάπαξ ἑαυτὸν ὀνομάσας, διτγεῖσθαι τὰ ἐξῆς, ἀλλὰ πάλιν ἀναλαμβάνει. (There must have been many Johns, but this author does not say which John he was.) "Ὅτι μὲν οὖν Ἰωάννης ἐστὶν ὁ ταῦτα γράφων, αὐτῷ λέγοντι πιστευτέον· ποῖος δὲ οὗτος, ἄδηλον. Πολλοὺς δὲ ὁμωνύμους Ἰωάννη τῷ ἀποστόλῳ νομίζω γεγονέναι, οἳ διὰ τὴν πρὸς ἐκεῖνον ἀγάπην, καὶ τὸ θαυμάζειν καὶ ζηλοῦν, ἀγαπηθῆναι τε ὁμοίως αὐτῷ βούλεσθαι ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, καὶ τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν τὴν αὐτὴν ἡσπάσαντο. (John Mark was not the author. Two tombs at Ephesus.) Εἰ δὲ οὗτος ὁ γράψας ἐστὶν, οὐκ ἂν φαιήν· οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀφίχθαι σὺν αὐτοῖς εἰς τὴν Ἀσίαν γέγραπται· ἀλλὰ, "Ἀναχθέντες μὲν," φησὶν, "ἀπὸ τῆς Πάφου οἱ περὶ Παῦλον ἦλ-

<sup>3</sup> Dionysius has no great certainty regarding the two tombs. When he dismisses the idea of John Mark being the author of the Apocalypse, he puts forward John Presbyter very modestly—οἶμαι—he cannot speak positively. Nor is his diffidence unnatural when we see that his only evidence is that there were two tombs in Ephesus, as Eusebius also records. But how Dionysius concludes that the words and the composition betokened 'this other' John does not appear.

De bono patient. Pater Deus praecepit filium suum adorari . . . et in Apocalypsi angelus Joanni volenti adorare se resistit et dicit: “Vide ne feceris, quia conservus tuus sum, et fratrum tuorum. Jesum Dominum adora.” (Apoc. xix. 10.)

De eleemos. Audi in Apocalypsi Domini tui vocem, ejusmodi homines justis objurgationibus increpantem: “Dicis,” inquit, “dives sum, et ditatus sum, et nullius rei egeo, et nescis quoniam tu es miser, et miserabilis, et pauper, et coecus, et nudus es. Suadeo tibi emere a me aurum ignitum de igne, ut sis dives, et vestem albam vestiariis, et non appareat in te foeditas nuditatis tuae, et collyrio inunge oculos tuos ut videas. (Apoc. iii. 17, 18.)

Itaque sine dubio autem dici angeli 12, noctis angeli 12, pro numero scilicet horarum; hi sunt namque 24 testes dierum et noctium, qui sedent ante thronum Dei coronas aureas in capitibus suis habentes; quos in Apocalypsi Joannis Apostoli et Evangelistae seniores vocat, idcirco quia seniores sunt et aliis angelis et hominibus. (Apoc. iv. 4.)

In Apocal. (In Lardner, Part. II. C. LVI.) Liber apertus Apocalypsis est, quam Joannes vidit.

Ibid. Hoc est, quoniam quando hoc vidit Joannes, erat in insula Patmos, in metallum damnatus a Domitiano Caesare. Ibi ergo vidit Apocalypsin. Et cum senior jam putaret se per passionem accepturum receptionem, interfecto Domitiano, omnia iudicia ejus soluta sunt, et Joannes de metallo dimissus. Sic postea tradidit hanc eandem quam acceperat a Domino Apocalypsin. Hoc est, "oportet te iterum prophetare."

<sup>1</sup> Eusebius is unable to pronounce a decided opinion on the Apocalypse. There is always something like εἰ φανεῖται in his mind and in his expression. His Anti-Millenarian views tended to make him disinclined to admit the book on which Millenarians founded their case; while his real honesty made him incapable of letting such feelings rule his judgment. Impressed with the able arguments of Dionysius, he swayed to and fro.

NOTE ON CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE copious extracts in this chapter show that the Apocalypse has had a varied measure of acceptance. At first, while men still expected an early return of Jesus Christ, the book seems to have been widely popular. This popularity lasted to the end of the second century. Hermas imitated it; Papias quoted it as inspired and trustworthy; Justin has from it his only citation of a New Testament book by name. And it appears that he not only quoted but expounded it, as also did Irenaeus. On the other side we must note its absence from the Peshito. The Alogi (see below—Heretics), who opposed all the Johannine writings, objected to this book, as to the others.

In the third century, although Origen and Hippolytus ascribed it to the Apostle John, opposition grew formidable. Caius, a "Roman Presbyter," about whom little is certainly known, ascribed an apocalyptic book to Cerinthus; and his reference is perplexing, as he apparently found in the book a description of a very carnal reign of the Saints in Jerusalem. On this account Hug and others have denied that his reference is to the Johannine Apocalypse. But no other book is known to which the reference can apply; and besides, it is just such an exaggerated description as would originate in keen controversy. In the latter part of the century Dionysius of Alexandria, the pupil and successor of Origen, prepared a formidable indictment to which all subsequent objectors have recourse for arguments. The headings of paragraphs in our text give a summary of his argument. There is good reason to believe that in the case of Dionysius, as certainly in that of Eusebius, it was dislike of millenarian views which led to depreciation of the Apocalypse.

From the days of Jerome, who accepted the Apocalypse as the work of the Apostle John, and expressly based his opinion on the testimonies of the ancients, there was little controversy regarding it in the Western Church until the Reformation. In the Eastern Church—from the rejection by Cyril of Jerusalem A.D. 386—there was considerable discussion; some doubting the canonicity of the book, some doubting that it was by John the son of Zebedee.

At the Reformation, Erasmus expressed his doubts of the authorship; Zwinglius rejected the book; Luther cast it off with contumely; Calvin used it, but did not comment upon it. At that time the chief controversy in Europe was upon the central doctrine of Justification, and the Apocalypse did not occupy a prominent position. But at a later date, when the controversy became ecclesiastical rather than doctrinal, each side, Protestant and Roman Catholic, interpreted it as a prophecy of the downfall of the other; and it was universally accepted as canonical. Bossuet and Vitringa are leading representatives of the two divisions of Western Christendom. Bengel's system of interpretation has been much followed.

During the 19th century there has been a keen controversy both as to the canonicity and as to the authorship of the book. Here, again, theological convictions have had no little share in deciding the side taken by critics. Its genuineness is maintained, and—if we may use the word—its canonicity, by those who are usually found as opponents of such claims. Those who ascribe a late date to the Gospels—especially to the Fourth Gospel—generally give the Apocalypse an early date, and claim the Apostle as its author, using its language and style as an argument against the idea of the Gospel being written by the same Apostle. In this way the views of the Tübingen school as to the first form of Jewish Christianity lead them to uphold the canonicity of this book, though denying to almost all the rest of the New Testament an Apostolic origin.

But even apart from questions of canonicity there is great division of opinion as to the authorship. The scraps of Papias have been as fruitful of works upon the two Johns as in works upon the original of Matthew's Gospel, or upon the "order" of Mark. Dionysius, though in a very diffident manner (see p. 349), took refuge in the supposition that Presbyter John was the author. But against this Irenaeus is decided. Moreover, if Irenaeus (p. 54 &c.) and Arethas (p. 338) be right, Papias, as a "hearer of John," is an ultimate authority, and Papias's testimony seems to be distinct; so that the authorship by the son of Zebedee is established. But the argument on the other side is that Irenaeus or Papias, or both, must have been mistaken. (See on "Aretas" Prof. W. P. Dickson's article in Smith's Dict. of Christian Biography.) For Presbyter John as the author we have Credner, Bleek, Ewald, De Wette, Lücke (ultimately), Düsterdieck and Keim. For the Apostle John, Eichhorn, Ebrard, Hengstenberg, Hofmann, Gebhardt and Krenkel. For John Mark, Hitzig and Weisse.

Ann. XV. 44. Sed non ope humana, non largitionibus principis aut deum placamentis decedebat infamia quin jussum incendium crederetur. Ergo abolendo rumori Nero subdidit reos et quaesitissimis poenis affecit, quos per flagitia invisos vulgus Christianos appellabat. Auctor nominis ejus Christus Tiberio imperitante per procuratorem Pontium Pilatum supplicio affectus erat; repressaque in praesens exitiabilis superstitio rursum erumpebat, non modo per Judaeam, originem ejus mali, sed per Urbem etiam, quo cuncta undique atrocia aut pudenda confluunt celebranturque. Igitur primum correpti qui fatebantur, deinde indicio eorum multitudo ingens haud perinde in crimine incendii quam odio humani generis convicti sunt. Et pereuntibus addita ludibria, ut ferarum tergis contacti laniatu canum interirent aut crucibus affixi, aut flammandi, atque ubi defecisset dies, in usum nocturni luminis urerentur. Hortos suos ei spectaculo Nero obtulerat et circense ludicrum edebat, habitu aurigae permixtus plebi vel curriculo insistens. Unde quamquam adversus fontes et novissima exempla meritos miseratio oriebatur, tanquam non utilitate publica sed in saevitiam unius absumerentur.

2. MARTIAL (A.D. 60 TO A.D. 100).

Lib. X. Epigr. 25:—

In matutina nuper spectatus arena
 Mucius, imposuit qui sua membra focus,
 Si patiens fortisque tibi durusque videtur,
 Abderitanae pectora plebis habes.
 Nam, cum dicatur, tunicâ praesente molestâ
 Ure manum, plus est dicere: Non facio.<sup>1</sup>

3. PLINY'S LETTER ASKING DIRECTIONS FROM TRAJAN.

Solemne est mihi, domine, omnia de quibus dubito ad te referre, quis enim potest melius vel cunctationem meam regere vel ignorantiam instruere? Cognitionibus de Christianis interfui numquam: ideo nescio quid et quatenus aut puniri soleat aut quaeri, nec mediocriter haesitavi, sitne aliquod discrimen aetatum, an quamlibet teneri nihil a robustioribus differant, detur paenitentiae venia, an ei qui omnino Christianus fuit desisse non prosit, nomen ipsum, si flagitiis careat, an flagitia cohaerentia nomini puniantur. Interim in iis qui ad me tamquam Christiani deferebantur hunc sum secutus modum. Interrogavi ipsos an essent Christiani: confitentes iterum ac tertio interrogavi supplicium minatus: perseverantes duci jussi. Neque enim dubitabam, qualecumque esset quod faterentur, pertinaciam certe et inflexibilem obstinationem debere puniri. Fuerunt alii similis amentiae, quos, quia cives Romani erant, adnotavi in urbem remittendos. Mox ipso tractatu, ut fieri solet, diffundente se crimine plures species inciderunt. Propositus est libellus sine auctore multorum nomina continens. Qui negabant esse se Christianos aut fuisse, cum praeunte me deos appellarent et imagini tuae, quam propter hoc jusseram cum simulacris numinum adferri, ture ac vino supplicarent, praeterea male dicerent Christo, quorum nihil posse cogi dicuntur qui sunt re vera Christiani, dimittendos esse putavi. Alii ab indice nominati esse se Christianos dixerunt et mox negaverunt; fuisse quidem, sed desisse, quidam ante triennium, quidam ante plures annos, non nemo etiam ante viginti. Hi quoque omnes et imaginem tuam deorumque simulacra venerati sunt et Christo male dixerunt. Adfirmabant autem hanc fuisse summam vel culpae suae vel erroris, quod essent soliti stato die ante lucem convenire carmenque Christo quasi deo dicere secum invicem seque sacramento non in scelus aliquod obstringere, sed ne furta, ne latrocinia, ne adulteria committerent, ne fidem fallerent, ne depositum appellati abnegarent: quibus peractis morem sibi discedendi fuisse, rursusque coeundi ad capiendum cibum, promiscuum tamen et innoxium; quod ipsum facere desisse post edictum meum, quo secundum mandata tua hetaerias esse vetueram. Quo magis necessarium credidi ex duabus ancillis, quae ministrae dicebantur, quid esset veri et per tormenta quaerere. Nihil aliud inveni quam superstitionem pravam immodicam. Ideo dilata cognitione ad consulendum te decurri. Visa est enim mihi res digna consultatione, maxime propter periclitantium numerum. Multi enim omnis aetatis, omnis ordinis, utriusque sexus etiam, vocantur in periculum et vocabuntur. Neque civitates tantum sed vicos etiam atque agros superstitionis istius contagio pervagata est; quae videtur sisti et corrigi posse. Certe satis constat prope jam desolata templa coepisse celebrari et sacra sollemnia diu intermissa repeti pastumque venire victimarum, cujus adhuc rarissimus emptor inveniebatur. Ex quo facile est opinari, quae turba hominum emendari possit, si sit poenitentiae locus.

<sup>1</sup> Martial. Juvenal also, Sat. VIII. 235, says: "Ausi quod liceat tunicâ punire molestâ" (see also Sat. I. 155). And Seneca, in his list of cruelties, mentions the blazing coat last, "illam tunicam, alimentis ignium et illitam et intextam" (Ep. 14), apparently as a climax. The words of Martial may be supposed to describe the hardihood of Christians as greater than that of Mucius.

4. THE EMPEROR'S REPLY TO PLINY.

TRAJANUS PLINIO.

Actum quem debuisti, mi Secunde, in excutiendis causis eorum qui Christiani ad te delati fuerant secutus es. Neque enim in universum aliquid quod quasi certam formam habeat constitui potest. Conquirendi non sunt: si deferantur et arguantur, puniendi sunt, ita tamen ut qui negaverit se Christianum esse idque re ipsa manifestum fecerit, id est supplicando dis nostris, quamvis suspectus in praeteritum, veniam ex paenitentia impetret. Sine auctore vero propositi libelli in nullo crimine locum habere debent. Nam et pessimi exempli nec nostri saeculi est.<sup>2</sup>

5. SUETONIUS<sup>1</sup> (A.D. 121).

Nero c. 16. Afflicti suppliciis Christiani, genus hominum superstitionis novae et maleficae. (2 Tim. i. 8, 16; ii. 16-18.)

Accepi litteras ad me scriptas a decessore tuo Sereno Graniano, clarissimo viro: et non placet mihi relationem silentio

<sup>2</sup> Trajan's rescript means that, while Christians were not to be sought for, they were to be punished, simply because they were Christians, when accused and convicted of that crime. They might escape by recanting and sacrificing to Roman idols. The same principle regulates the answer of Marcus Aurelius (A.D. 177) to the inquiry of the Governor of Lyons, if we are to trust the narrative preserved by Eusebius H. E. V. 1.

<sup>1</sup> Suetonius (who testifies in these passages to the banishment of Christians by Claudius, and to their persecution by Nero) elsewhere shows how great were the calamities which fell upon the people of Jerusalem in the reigns of Vespasian and Titus. See Sueton. Vespas. c. 4-8; Sueton. cc. 4, 5. In his life of Domitian, c. 12, he speaks of some Jews who sought to evade payment of the Jewish tax on the ground of not being Jews; and in this he probably refers to the Christians. See Lardner, Vol. III. p. 618, &c.

praeterire, ne et innoxii perturbentur et calumniatoribus latrocinandi tribuatur occasio. Itaque si evidenter provinciales huic petitioni suae adesse valent adversum Christianos, ut pro tribunali eos in aliquo arguant, hoc eis exequi non prohibeo: precibus autem in hoc solis et adclamationibus uti eis non permitto. Etenim multo aequius est, si quis volet accusare, te cognoscere de objectis. Si quis igitur accusat et probat adversum leges quicquam agere memoratos homines, pro merito peccatorum etiam supplicia statues. Illud mehercule magnopere curabis, ut si quis calumniae gratia quemquam horum postulaverit reum, in hunc pro sui nequitia suppliciiis severioribus vindices.

Μιτρονζίῳ Φουρντανῶ. Ἐπιστολὴν ἐδεξάμην γραφεῖσάν μοι ἀπὸ Σερεννίου Γρανιανοῦ, λαμπροτάτου ἀνδρός, ὅτινα σὺ διέδξω. Οὐ δοκεῖ μοι οὖν τὸ πρᾶγμα ἀζήτητον καταλπεῖν, ἵνα μήτε οἱ ἄνθρωποι ταραττωνται, καὶ τοῖς συκοφάνταις χορηγία κακοουργίας παρασχεθῇ. Εἰ οὖν σαφῶς εἰς ταύτην τὴν ἀζήωσιν οἱ ἐπαρχῶνται δύνανται διῴσχυρίζεσθαι κατὰ τῶν Χριστιανῶν, ὥς been adopted by Baur (Ch. Hist. Part V), Hilgenf. (Einl. p. 169), Overbeck (Studien zur Geschichte der Alten Kirche, 1875), Aubé (Les Persecutions de l'Eglise, 1875) and others. Keim also (1878) returned to the charge in his "Aus dem Urchristenthum" p. 181. See defences in Wieseler's "Die Christenverfolgungen der Caesaren" 1878 (p. 18), and in Renan's "L'Eglise chretienne" 1879 (p. 32). Eusebius says that Serenus Granianus had written that it seemed to him unjust that Christians should be put to death because of popular clamour, and without legal trial and conviction of crime; and that Hadrian's reply was to the effect that no man should be put to death without a formal trial and conviction. His text bears out his summary. But the question is whether this is consistent with history. Or to put it somewhat differently: Was it still enough to prove that a man was a Christian, or must a definite crime be proved against him? Those who doubt the letters ascribed to Hadrian, Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius (for whose long and obviously forged "Letter to The Senate" see Otto's Justin p. 246), all of them increasingly favourable to Christians, believe that Trajan's edict in his letter to Pliny was still in force. Their strong point is that Justin's Apology and the stories of the Martyrs shew that Christians—simply as such—were in danger of death. If those merciful provisions in the disputed Imperial edicts had existed, Christians would not have needed to make their constant demand to be tried for crimes and not merely on account of their creed. Marcus Aurelius in his letter respecting the Christians in Gaul (Eus. II. E. V. 1. 42) substantially repeats Trajan's instructions. If that account in Eusebius state correctly what the Emperor said, it is inconceivable that the Antonines wrote the almost Christian letters ascribed to them. But Hadrian's letter may still be genuine, inasmuch as it only stipulates for explicit accusation, and does not define what would be conduct "against the laws."

καὶ πρὸ βήματος ἀποκρίνσθαι, ἐπὶ τοῦτο μόνον τραπῶσιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀξιώσῃσιν, οὐδὲ μόναις βοᾷς. Πολλῷ γὰρ μᾶλλον προσῆγεν, εἴ τις κατηγορεῖν βούλοιο, τοῦτό σε διαγινώσκειν. Εἴ τις οὖν κατηγορεῖ καὶ δείκνυσί τι παρὰ τοῖς νόμοις πρᾶττοντας, οὔτως ὀρίξει κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ ἁμαρτήματος· ὥς μὰ τὸν Ἡρακλέα εἴ τις σινοφαντίας χάριν τοῦτο προτεῖνοι, διαλάμβανε ὑπὲρ τῆς δεινότητος, καὶ φρόντιζε ὅπως ἂν ἐκδικήσῃας.

7. LETTER OF HADRIAN TO SERVIANUS.<sup>1</sup>

FLAVII VOPISCI SYRACUSII "SATURNINUS." A.D. 129.

C. II.<sup>2</sup> Hadrianus Augustus Serviano Consuli Salutem. Aegyptum, quam mihi laudabas, Serviane carissime, totam didici levem pendulam et ad omnia famae momenta volitantem. Illic qui Serapem colunt Christiani sunt et devoti sunt Serapi qui se Christi Episcopus dicunt. Nemo illic Archisynagogus Judaeorum, nemo Samarites, nemo Christianorum Presbyter, non mathematicus, non haruspex, non alyptes. Ipse ille Patriarcha cum Aegyptum venerit, ab aliis Serapidem adorare, ab aliis cogitur Christum. Genus hominum seditiosissimum vanissimum injuriosissimum: civitas opulenta dives fecunda, in qua nemo vivat otiosus. Alii vitrum conflant, ab aliis charta conficitur: alii linifiones, omnes certe ejuscumque artis et videntur et habentur. Podagrosi quod agant habent; habent cacci quod faciant. Ne chiragrici quidem apud eos otiosi vivunt. Unus illis Deus nullus [al. nummus] est. Hunc Christiani, hunc Judaei, hunc omnes venerantur et gentes. Et utinam melius esset morata civitas, digna profecto quae pro sui profunditate, quae pro sui magnitudine totius Aegypti teneat principatum. &c.

<sup>1</sup> Servianus or Severianus, Hadrian's brother-in-law, was consul A.D. 129, the year that Antinous was drowned. It is supposed that Hadrian was angry because the Christians would not worship his favourite. The letter is preserved by Flavius Vopiscus in his life of Saturninus (about A.D. 300).

Αὐτοκράτωρ Καῖσαρ Τίτος Αἴλιος Ἀδριανὸς Ἀντωνῖνος Σεβ-

 Ἐγὼ ὦμαι ὅτι καὶ τοὺς θεοὺς ἐπιμελεῖς ἔσεσθαι μὴ λανθάνειν τοὺς τοιοῦτους. Πολὺ γὰρ μᾶλλον ἐκείνους ζολάσοιεν, εἴπερ δύ-κατηγορεῖτε, καὶ ἑτέρα τινα ἐμβάλλετε, ἅτινα οὐ δυνάμεθα ἀπο-δεῖξαι. Εἴη δ' ἂν ἐκείνοις χρήσιμον τὸ δοκεῖν ἐπὶ τῇ κατηγο-ρουμένῳ τεθνάναι· καὶ νικῶσιν ὑμᾶς προϊέμενοι τὰς ἑαυτῶν ψυ-χὰς, ἥπερ πειθόμενοι οἷς ἀξιοῦτε πράσσειν αὐτοῖς. Περὶ δὲ τῶν σεισμῶν τῶν γερονότων καὶ τῶν γιγνομένων οὐκ εἰκὸς ἐπομνησσαι ὑμᾶς ἀθυμοῦντας, ὅτανπερ ὅσι, παραβάλλοντας τὰ ἡμέτερα πρὸς

 Καὶ ἡμεῖς μὲν ἀγνοεῖν δοκεῖτε παρ' ἐκείνων τὸν χρόνον τοὺς θεοὺς, καὶ τῶν ἱερῶν ἀμελεῖτε, θρησκείαν δὲ τὴν περὶ τὸν θεὸν οὐκ ἐπίστασθε. Ὅθεν καὶ τοὺς θρησκειόοντας ἐξήλώκατε, καὶ διώκετε ἕως θανάτου. Ὑπὲρ τῶν τοιούτων καὶ ἄλλοι τινὲς τῶν τῶν τοιούτων πολλοὶ ἐσήμασαν· οἷς δὴ καὶ ἀντέγραψα, τῇ τοῦ πατρὸς μου κατακολούθῳ γνώμῃ. Εἰ δέ τις ἔχει πρὸς τινα τῶν τοιούτων πρᾶγμα καταφέρειν ὥς τοιοῦτον, ἐκεῖνος ὁ καταφερό-μενος ἀπολελείσθω τοῦ ἐγκλήματος, καὶ φαίνεται τοιοῦτος ὢν, ἐκεῖνος δὲ ὁ καταφέρων ἔνοχος ἔσται τῇ δίκῃ.

 ably not by Justin himself. Compare the text in Eus. H. E. IV. 13, and especially the superscription which professes to be from Marcus Aurelius. This inconsistency in the authorities is one of many grounds for doubting the whole production. Our text is from Otto's Justin, I. p. 244. Antoninus Pius did write in favour of Christians to various cities, if Melito is to be trusted. See Melito in Eus. H. E. IV. 26.

9. LUCIAN (A.D. 176).<sup>1</sup>

I. CELSUS'S BOOK. THE TITLE AND METHOD.

Origen c. Celsum, I. 40. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 733.) Ἐξῆς δὲ τούτοις ἀπὸ τοῦ κατὰ Ματθαῖον, τάχα δὲ καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν Εὐαγγε-

<sup>1</sup> Celsus wrote a book entitled λόγος ἀληθείης, which appears to have been an able assault upon Christianity from a philosophical and historical point of view. From various indications in the book, especially from the references to the state of the heathen world and to the persecution of Christians, the date may be fixed at about A.D. 178. Celsus refers to the Gospel narrative so fully and so frequently, that it is only necessary to give in our text some specimens of his mode of proceeding, and an indication of his acquaintance with each of the four canonical Gospels. He used Matthew—and Matthew in its present form (on this see Keim's Celsus, p. 228)—as his chief authority, but he knew the others, and quoted each of them. There are beyond question references to John. The incidents noticed by Celsus are (with at most one or two exceptions) from our Gospels. He refers to the Sibyl, saying that her writings are used and interpolated by Christians (V. 61; VII. 53); to the mystic symbols of the Ophites (VI. 25); and to Gnostic sects and writings (V. 54; V. 62; VIII. 15). He does not refer to any Christian writer of note, nor to any extra-canonical Christian work (unless we regard Enoch (V. 54) and the Dialogue of Papias and Jason (IV. 52) as exceptions). His references to the Epistles, though clear, are few. He seems to have set himself to study Christianity at its source; and he constructed an elaborate, keen, and able polemical treatise, anticipating most of the objections to the Gospels which are to be found in writers even of our own day. His analysis of the accounts of the Resurrection, and his criticism of the Discourses of Jesus, may be cited as examples of his acuteness. His inability to appreciate, or even to understand, the moral beauty of the life of Jesus Christ, shows how much lower was his own moral than his intellectual tone. Origen says that he was an Epicurean: he seems to have been a friend of Lucian; and, like his friend, he opposed Christianity in a hard way.

The work of Celsus has been compiled in Greek from Origen by C. R. Jachmann (1836), and Keim (1873) collected the passages and translated them into German with copious dissertations on the age and philosophy of the author. Lardner's Analysis is more intelligible, though less extended, than Keim's.

Διασύρας δὲ, ὡς ὤρετο, τὴν περὶ τοῦ ἐκ παρθένου γεγενῆσθαι τὸν Σωτῆρα ἡμῶν ἱστορίαν, οὐ τὰ ἐξῆς τῇ τάξει ἐκτίθεται· ἐπεὶ μηδὲν ἔχει τεταγμένον θυμὸς καὶ ἔχθρα. Εἰ μὲν γὰρ τὴν τάξιν ἐτήρει, λαβὼν ἂν τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον, καὶ κατηγορεῖν αὐτοῦ προθέμενος, τῆς πρώτης ἂν ἱστορίας κατειπὼν, ἐξῆς ἐπὶ τὴν δευτέραν παρεγίνετο, καὶ οὕτως ἐπὶ τὰς λοιπὰς. Οὗτος οὖν ὃ καὶ τοῦτων καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν Ἑλλήνων σοφώτερος, ἀκολούθως τῷ γράσκειν πάντ' εἰδέναι, Ἀληθῆ Λόγον ἐπέγραψεν αὐτοῦ τὸ βιβλίον.

II. THE GOSPELS AS A WHOLE.

Origen c. Celsus, II. 13. Μετὰ ταῦτά φησιν ὁ παρὰ τῷ Κέλσῳ Ἰουδαῖος, ὅτι “πολλὰ ἔχων λέγειν περὶ τῶν κατὰ τὸν Ἰησοῦν γενομένων καὶ ἀληθῆ, καὶ οὐ παραπλήσια τοῖς ἐπὶ τῶν μαθητῶν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ γραφεῖσιν, ἐκὼν ἐκεῖνα παραλείπω.”

Ibid. II. 15. Φησὶ δὲ ὁ Κέλσος, ὅτι “καὶ μαθηταὶ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ἐπὶ πράγματι περιφανεῖ μηδὲν ἔχοντες ἐπισκήψασθαι, τοῦτο ἐπενόησαν, τὸ λέγειν αὐτὸν πάντα προεγνωκέναι.”

Ibid. II. 26. Ἐν δὲ λέγει ὁ παρὰ τῷ Κέλσῳ Ἰουδαῖος πρὸς τοὺς Ἰησοῦ μαθητὰς ὡς πλασασμένους ταῦτα, ὅτι “οὐδὲ ψευδόμενοι τὰ πλάσματα ὑμῶν πιθανῶς ἐπικαλίψαι ἠδυνήθητε.”

Ibid. II. 27. Μετὰ ταῦτά τινας τῶν πιστεινόντων φησὶν “ὡς ἐκ μέθης ἦγοντας εἰς τὸ φρεστιάειν αὐτοῖς, μεταχαράττειν ἐκ τῆς πρώτης γραφῆς τὸ Εὐαγγέλιον τριχῇ καὶ τετραχῇ καὶ πολλαχῇ, καὶ μεταπλάττειν, ἵν’ ἔχοιεν πρὸς τοὺς ἐλέγχους ἀρεῖσθαι.”

Ibid. II. 74. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ὑμῖν ἐκ τῶν ὑμετέρων συγγραμμάτων ἐφ’ οἷς οὐθενὸς ἄλλον μάρτυρος χρῆζομεν, αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἐαυτοῖς περιπίπτετε.<sup>2</sup>

III. GOSPEL OF MATTHEW.

Origen c. Celsum, I. 28. Ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ προσωποποιεῖ, τρόπον τινὰ μιμησάμενος ἐν ῥήτορος παιδίον εισαγόμενον, καὶ εἰσάγει Ἰουδαῖον πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν λέγοντά τινα μειρακιωδῶς, καὶ οὐδὲν φιλοσόφου πολιῆς ἄξιον· φέρε κατὰ δύναμιν καὶ ταῦτα ἐξετάσαντες ἐξελέγξωμεν, ὅτι οὐδὲ τὸ ἀρμόζον πάντῃ τῷ Ἰουδαίῳ πρόσωπον ἐν τοῖς λεγομένοις τετήριχε. Μετὰ ταῦτα προσωποποιεῖ Ἰουδαῖον αὐτῷ διαλεγόμενον τῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ ἐλέγχοντα αὐτὸν περὶ πολλῶν μὲν, ὡς οἶεται· πρῶτον δὲ, ὡς πλασασμένου αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐκ παρθένου γένεσιν· ὀνειδιζει δ’ αὐτῷ καὶ ἐπὶ

τοῦ γήμαντος, τέκτονος τὴν τέχνην ὄντος, ἐξεῶσθαι, ἐλεγχθεῖσαν ὡς μεμοιχευμένην. Εἵτα λέγει, ὡς ἐκβληθεῖσα ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀνδρός, καὶ πλανωμένη ἀτίμως σκοτίον ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰησοῦν· καὶ ὅτι οὐ-τος διὰ πενίαν εἰς Αἴγυπτον μισθαρήσας· κακεῖ δυνάμεων τι-νων πειραθεῖς, ἐφ' αἷς Αἰγύπτιοι σεμνύνονται, ἐπαγγέλθεν, ἐν ταῖς δυνάμεσι μέγα φρονῶν, καὶ δι' αὐτὰς θεὸν αὐτὸν ἀνηγόρευσε.
(Mat. ii. 2.)

Ibid. I. 38. Ἐτι δὲ λαβὼν ἀπὸ τῆς γεγραμμένης ἐν τῷ κατὰ Ματθαῖον εὐαγγελίῳ ἱστορίας περὶ τοῦ εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἀποδεδι-μηγένα τὸν Ἰησοῦν, τοῖς μὲν παραδόξοις εἰς τοῦτο οὐκ ἐπίστευσεν, οὐθ' ὅτι ἄγγελος τοῦτο ἔχρησεν, οὔτε εἴ τι ἠνίσσετο ὁ κατα-λιπὼν τὴν Ἰουδαίαν Ἰησοῦς καὶ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ἐπιδημῶν· ἀνέπλασε

θεῖν αὐτῷ ὡς Χριστῷ· διαβάλλειν δ' αὐτὰς βουλόμενος ὡς ἀπὸ μαγείας καὶ οὐ θείας δυνάμει γεγενημένας· φησὶ γὰρ αὐτὸν σκότιον τραφέντα μισθαρήσαντα εἰς Αἴγυπτον δυνάμεων τινων πει-ραθέντα, ἐκεῖθεν ἐπαγγέλθῃν, θεὸν δι' ἐκείνας τὰς δυνάμεις ἐαν-τὸν ἀναγορεύοντα. (Mat. ii. 13.)

Ibid. I. 58. Μετὰ ταῦτα ὁ παρὰ τῷ Κέλσῳ Ἰουδαῖος ἀντιτῶν ἐν τῷ Εὐαγγελίῳ Μάγων Χαλδαίους φησὶν ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ λελέχθαι κινηθέντας ἐπὶ τῇ γενέσει αὐτοῦ ἐληλυθέναι προσκενήσοντας αὐτὸν ἔτι νήπιον ὡς θεόν· καὶ Ἡρώδῃ τῷ τετράρχῃ τοῦτο δεδηλωμέναι· τὸν δὲ πέμψαντα, ἀποκτεῖναι τοὺς ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ χρόνῳ γεγενημένους, οἰόμενον καὶ τοῦτον ἀνελεῖν σὺν αὐτοῖς· μὴ πως, τὸν αὐτάρχη ἐπιβιάσας χρόνον βασιλεύσῃ. Ὅρα οὖν ἐν τούτῳ τὸ παράλογον τοῦ μὴ διακρίνοντος Μάγους Χαλδαίων, μηδὲ τὰς ἐπαγγελίας διαφόρους οὔσας αὐτῶν θεωρήσαντος, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο καταφενεσάμενον τῆς εὐαγγελικῆς γραφῆς. Οὐκ οἶδα δ' ὅπως καὶ τὸ κινήσαν τοὺς Μάγους σεσιώπηξε, καὶ οὐκ εἶπεν αὐτὸ εἶναι ἀστέρα ὁφθέντα ἐπ' αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ ἀνατολῇ, κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον. (Mat. ii.)

Ibid. I. 62. Μετὰ ταῦτα δ' ἐπεὶ μηδὲ τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῶν ἀποστόλων ἐπιστάμενος δέκα εἶπεν ἢ ἑνδεκά τινες ἐξαρτισάμενον τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἑαυτῷ ἐπιρῶντας ἀνθρώπους, τελώνας καὶ ναύτας τοὺς πονηροτάτους, μετὰ τούτων τῆδε κακεῖσε αὐτὸν ἀποδεδραζέναι αἰσχροῦς καὶ γλίσχρους τροφὰς συνάγοντα. Φέρε καὶ περὶ τούτων, κατὰ τὸ δινατὸν, διαλέβωμεν· φανερόν δέ ἐστι τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσιν εὐαγγελικοῖς λόγοις, ὅς οὐδ' ἀνεγνωκέναι ὁ Κέλσος φαίνεται, ὅτι δώδεκα ἀποστόλους ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐπελέξατο, κ.τ.λ. (Mat.

x. 1, &c. Also Mark iii. 14; Luke vi. 13, &c.)

· Ibid. I. 66. Ἐπὶ δὲ τοῖτοις ἑξῆς ὁ Ἰουδαῖος πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν παρὰ τῷ Κέλσῳ λέγει· “τί δὲ καὶ σε νήπιον ἔτι ἐχρῆν εἰς Αἴ-γυπτον ἐκκομίζεσθαι; μὴ ἀποσφαγῆς; Θεὸν γὰρ οὐκ εἰσὸς ἦν περὶ θανάτου δεδιέναι. Ἄλλ' ἄγγελος μὲν ἦεν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, νελείων σοι καὶ τοῖς σοῖς οἰκέτοις φεύγειν, μὴ ἐγκαταληφθέντες ἀποθάνητε. Φυλάσσειν δέ σε αὐτόθι ὁ δέο ἦδη, διὰ σε πεπομιφῶς ἄγγέλους, ὁ μέγας Θεὸς τὸν ἴδιον υἱὸν, οὐκ ἐδύνατο;”
(Mat. ii.)

Ibid. II. 24. Ἐξῆς δὲ τοῖτοις θέλων παραστήσαι ὅτι ἀλγεινὰ καὶ ἀναρὰ ἦν τὰ συμβάνια αὐτῷ· καὶ ὅτι οὐκ οἶόν τε ἦν βουληθέντα αὐτὸν ποιῆσαι εἶναι αὐτὰ μὴ τοιαῦτα, λέγει· “τί οὖν ποιτιᾷται, καὶ ὁδῶρεται, καὶ τὸν τοῦ ὀλέθρου φόβον εἴχεται παραδραμεῖν, λέγων ὅδε πως ὦ πάτερ εἰ δύναται τὸ ποιήριον τοῦτο παρελθεῖν.” (Mat. xxvi. 39.)—Καὶ ἐν τοῖτοις δὲ ὅρα τὸ τοῦ Κέλσου κακοῦργον . . . οὐκέτι δὲ καὶ τὸ αὐτόθεν ἐμφαίνον τὴν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα εὐσέβειαν αὐτοῦ καὶ μεγαλοψυχίαν, ἑξῆς τούτῳ ἀναγεγραμμένον παρατίθεται, οὕτως ἔχον· “πλὴν οὐχ ὥς ἐγὼ θέλω, ἀλλ' ὥς σύ.” (Mat. xxvi. 39.)

· Ibid. II. 45. Πρόσχευς δὲ καὶ τῷ ἐπιπολαίῳ τοῦ περὶ τῶν τότε μαθητῶν Ἰησοῦ λόγου ἐν ᾧ φησιν· “εἴτα οἱ μὲν τότε ἕδντι αὐτῷ συνόντες, καὶ τῆς φωνῆς ἐπακούοντες αὐτοῦ, καὶ διδασκάλῳ χρόμενοι, ζολαζόμενον καὶ ἀποθνήσκοντα ὁρῶντες, οὔτε σίναπέ-θαιον, οὔτε ὑπεραπέθαιον αὐτοῦ, οὐδὲ ζολάσειον καταφρονεῖν ἐπέισθσαν· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡρῆσαντο εἶναι μαθηταί· νῦν δὲ ἡμεῖς αὐτῷ συναποθνήσκετε.” (Mat. xxvi. 56.)

· Ibid. VI. 16. Μετὰ ταῦτα τὴν κατὰ τῶν πλουσίων ἀπόφασιν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ εἰπόντος, “εὐκοπώτερον κάμηλον εἰσελθεῖν διὰ τρυπή-ματος ῥαφίδος, ἢ πλούσιον εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ,” φησὶν ἠντιχρὺς ἀπὸ Πλάτωνος εἰρησθαι, τοῦ Ἰησοῦ παραφθείραντος τὸ Πλατωνικόν, ἐν αἷς εἶπεν ὁ Πλάτων· ὅτι “ἀγαθὸν ὄντα διαφερόντως, καὶ πλούσιον εἶναι διαφερόντως, ἀδύνατον.” Τίς δ' οὐκ ἂν, καὶ μετρίως ἐφιστάνειν τοῖς πράγμασι δυνάμενος, τὸν Κέλσον γελᾶσαι, οὐ τῶν πιστευόντων τῷ Ἰησοῦ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν

IV. MARK AND LUKE.

Origen c. Celsum, I. 41. Ἔστι δ' ὁ Ἰουδαῖος ἀντιῶ ἔτι ταῦτα λέγων, πρὸς ὃν ὁμολογοῦμεν εἶναι Κίριον ἡμῶν, τὸν Ἰησοῦν· “λοιομένῳ, φησὶ, σοὶ παρὰ τῷ Ἰωάννῃ φάσμα ὄρηθρος ἐξ ἄερος λέγεις ἐπιπτῆναι.” Εἴτα πινθανόμενος ὁ παρ' αὐτῶν Ἰουδαῖός φησι· “τίς τοῦτο εἶδεν ἀξιόχρεως μάρτυς τὸ φάσμα; ἢ τίς ἤκουσεν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ φωνῆς εἰσποιοῦσης σε υἱὸν τῷ Θεῷ, πλην ὅτι σὺ φῆς, καὶ τίνα ἓνα ἐπάγη τῶν μετὰ σοι κεκολασμένων;” (Mat. iii. 16; Mark i. 10; Luke iii. 22.)

Ibid. I. 63. Ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ ἐπιθόρητους εἶπεν ἀνθρώπους τελώνας καὶ ναύτας πονηροτάτους λέγων ὁ Κέλσος τοὺς ἀποστόλους Ἰησοῦ, καὶ περὶ τούτου φήσομεν· ὅτι ζοικεν, ἵνα μὲν ἐγκαλέσῃ τῷ λόγῳ, πιστεῖν ὅπου θέλει τοῖς γεγραμμένοις, ἵνα δὲ τὴν ἐμφαινομένην θειότητα ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς βιβλίοις ἀπαγγελλομένην μὴ παραδέξῃται, ἀπιστεῖν τοῖς Εὐαγγελίοις· δέον τὸ φιλάληθες ἰδόντα τῶν γραψάντων, ἐκ τῆς περὶ τῶν χειρόνων ἀναγραφῆς πιστεῦσαι καὶ περὶ τῶν θειοτέρων. Γέγραπται δὲ ἐν τῇ Βαρνάβα καθολικῇ ἐπιστολῇ (ὅθεν ὁ Κέλσος λαβὼν τάχα εἶπεν εἶναι ἐπιθόρητους καὶ πονηροτάτους τοὺς ἀποστόλους) ὅτι ἐξελέξατο τοὺς ἰδίους ἀποστόλους Ἰησοῦς, ὄντας ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν ἀνομωτέρους. Καὶ ἐν τῷ Εὐαγγελίῳ δὲ τῷ κατὰ Λουκᾶν φησι πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν ὁ Πέτρος· “ἐξέλθε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλὸς εἰμι, Κύριε.” (Luke v. 8.)

μὲν μὴ προδοῦναι ἔτι, τὸν δὲ μὴ ἀρνέσασθαι;" (Luke ix. 44; Mark ix. 31.)

· Ibid. II. 48. Καὶ νῦν δὲ φησιν οἷονεὶ ἡμῶς ἀποκρίνασθαι, ὅτι διὰ τοῦτ' ἐνομίσαμεν αὐτὸν εἶναι υἱὸν Θεοῦ, "ἐπεὶ χολοὺς καὶ τυφλοὺς ἐθεράπευσε." Προστίθισι δὲ καὶ τό· "ὡς ἡμεῖς φρατε, ἀνίστη νεκρούς." (Mat. xi. 5; Luke iv. 18.)

V. JOHN.

Origen c. Celsum, I. 50. Καὶ οὐκ οἶδ' ὅπως βουλόμενος καὶ εἰέροις περιθεῖναι τὸ δύναισθαι ἑλογοεῖσθαι, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἴσαν οἱ προσκητειθέντες, φησὶν, ὅτι “οἱ μὲν ἐνθουσιῶντες, οἱ δὲ ἀγείροντες, φασὶν ἔχειν ἄνωθεν εἶδὸν Θεοῦ.” (John iii. 31; viii. 23.)

Ibid. I. 67. Μετὰ ταῦτά φησιν ὁ παρὰ τῷ Κέλσῳ Ἰουδαῖος, ὡς φιλομαθὴς τις Ἕλλην, καὶ τὰ Ἑλλήνων πεπαιδευμένος, ὅτι “οἱ μὲν παλαοὶ μῦθοι Περσεῖ, καὶ Ἀμφίονι, καὶ Λιακῷ, καὶ Μινωῖ θείαν σπορὰν νείμαντες, οὐδ’ αὐτοῖς ἐπιστεύσαμεν· ὅμως ἐπέδειξαν ἐντῶν ἔργα μεγάλα καὶ θαυμαστά, ἀληθῶς τε ὑπὲρ ἄνθρωπον, ἵνα μὴ ἀπίθανοι δοκῶσι· σὺ δὲ δὴ τί καλὸν ἢ θαυμάσιον ἔργῳ ἢ λόγῳ πεποιήσας; ἡμῖν οὐδὲν ἐπεδείξω· καίτοι προκαλουμένων ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ σε παρασχέσθαι τι ἐναργὲς γινώρισμα, ὡς εἴης ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ παῖς.” (John ii. 18; x. 24; Mat. xxi. 23.)

Ibid. I. 70. Λέγει δ’ ὅτι “οὐδὲ τοιαῦτα σιτεῖται σῶμα Θεοῦ.” ὡς ἔχων αὐτὸν παραστήσαι ἀπὸ τῶν Εὐαγγελικῶν γραμμάτων σιτούμενον, καὶ ποῖα σιτούμενον. Ἄλλ’ ἔστω, λεγέτω αὐτὸν βεβρωκέναι μετὰ τῶν μαθητῶν τὸ πάσχα, οὐ μόνον εἰπόντα τό-τό “ἐπιθυμία ἐπεθύμησα τοῦτο τὸ πάσχα φαγεῖν μεθ’ ἡμῶν.”
ἀλλὰ καὶ βεβρωκότα. Λεγέτω δ’ αὐτὸν καὶ διψήσαντα παρὰ τῇ πηγῇ τοῦ Ἰακώβ πεπωκέναι, τί τοῦτο πρὸς τὰ περὶ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ ὑφ’ ἡμῶν λεγόμενα; Σαφῶς δὲ φαίνεται ἰσχυρὸς μετὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν βεβρωκώς· κατὰ γὰρ ἡμᾶς σῶμα ἀνείληφεν, ὡς γενόμενος ἐκ γυναικός. “Ἄλλ’ οὐδὲ σῶμα,” φησὶ, “Θεοῦ χρῆται τοιαύτῃ φωνῇ, οὐδὲ τοιᾶδε πειθοῖ.” (Luke xxii. 15; John iv. 6;
xxi. 13.)

Ibid. II. 31. Μετὰ ταῦτα Χριστιανοῖς ἐγκαλεῖ, “ὡς σοφιζομένοις ἐν τῷ λέγειν τὸν εἶδὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι αὐτολόγον,” καὶ οἶεται γε κρατύνειν τὸ ἔγκλημα· ἐπεὶ “λόγον ἐπαγγελλούμενοι εἶδὸν εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀποδείκνυμεν οὐ λόγον καθαρὸν καὶ ἅγιον, ἀλλὰ ἄνθρωπον ἀτιμώτατον ἀπαχθέντα ἀποτιμωτισθέντα. (John i.)

Ibid. II. 36. Εἰτά φησιν ὁ Κέλσος· “τί καὶ ἀνασκολληζο-μένοι τοῦ σώματος ποῖος ἰχῶρ, οἷός περ τε ῥέει μακάρεσσι θε-οῖσιν;” (John xix. 34.)

άσματα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ πρὸς τὴν ἐν ἀνθρώποις γοητείαν, φησὶν αὐταῖς λέξεσιν· “Ὡ φῶς καὶ ἀλήθεια<sup>3</sup>, τῇ αὐτοῦ φωνῇ διαβρόδην ἐξαγορεύει, καθὰ καὶ ὑμεῖς συγγεγράφατε διότι παρέσσονται ἡμῖν καὶ leading words of John’s Gospel—John i. 9, &c.

Origen c. Celsum, I. 28. (See before, p. 371.)

Ibid. I. 32. Ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐπαρέλθωμεν εἰς τὴν τοῦ Ἰουδαίου προσωποποιΐαν, ἐν ᾗ ἀναγέγραπται ἡ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ μήτηρ κίονσα

ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ, καὶ ἵκτονσα ἀπὸ τινος στρατιώτου Πανθήρα τοῦ-

τῆς παρθένου καὶ τοῦ Πανθήρα, καὶ τὸν τέκτονα ἐξωσάμενον αὐτὴν, ταῦτα πάντα ἀνέπλασαν ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τῆς παραδόξου

VII. THE EPISTLES.<sup>5</sup>

Origen c. Celsum, I. 9. Φησὶ δὲ “τινὰς μηδὲ βουλομένους διδόναι ἢ λαμβάνειν λόγον περὶ ὧν πιστεύουσι, χρῆσθαι τῷ, Μὴ ἐξετάζε, ἀλλὰ πίστευσον· καὶ· Ἡ πίστις σου σώσει σέ.” Καί φησιν αὐτοὺς λέγειν· Κακὸν ἢ ἐν τῷ βίῳ σοφία, ἀγαθὸν δ’ ἢ μωρία. (1 Pet. iii. 15; 1 Cor. iii. 19.)

καὶ τοιαῦτά φησι· “πάντων δέ” φησιν, “ἀκούσῃ τῶν ἐπὶ τοσούτον διεστιγχότων, καὶ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ταῖς ἔρσις ἀΐσχιστα διελεγ-χόντων, λεγόντων τὸ, ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐσταύρωται, καὶ γὰρ τῷ κόσμῳ” τοῦτο γὰρ μόνον ἀπὸ τοῦ Παύλου ἔοικε μεμνημονευέ-ναι ὁ Κέλσος. (Gal. vi. 14.)

Ibid. VI. 12. Διὸ μεταβαίνωμεν ἐπ’ ἄλλην Κέλσου κατηγο-ρίαν, οὗδὲ τὰς λέξεις ἡμῶν εἰδότος, ἀλλ’ ἐκ παρακουςματίων

παρὰ Θεῷ.” τοῦ Παύλου λέγοντος, “ἡ σοφία τοῦ κόσμου μωρία

He was a pupil of Origen, and flourished in the end of the third century. He wrote a treatise against Christianity in 15 Books. There are many references to him by Jerome in his Comment. on Galatians and elsewhere. He dwelt upon the inconsistencies in Scripture, on the dispute between Peter and Paul (Galat. ii.), and advanced other objections of the same kind. His friend Amelius might also be quoted as attesting the existence of the Gospel of John. See Eus. Praep. Evang. XI. 18. p. 539.

TESTIMONIES OF HERETICS.

1. SIMON MAGUS.<sup>1</sup>

Iren. Haer. B. I. 27. 4. (Simon the first Heretic.) Omnes, qui quoquo modo adulterant veritatem et praeconium ecclesiae laedunt, Simonis Samaritani Magi discipuli et successores sunt. (See Acts viii. 9.)

Hippol. Ref. Haer. VI. 9. Οἰκτιρίδιον δὲ λέγει εἶναι τὸν ἄνθρωπον τοῦτον τὸν ἐξ αἱμάτων γεγεννημένον, καὶ κατοικεῖν ἐν αὐτῇ τὴν ἀπέραντον δύναμιν, ἣν ᾔσχαν εἶναι τῶν ὅλων φυσίν. (John i. 13.)<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Simon Magus was "the hero of the romance of heresy," and as such occupies a great part of the Clementine narratives. According to Irenaeus, B. I. 23, Hippol. VI. 9. 14, &c., he was a man of great power, the framer of a system the cardinal tenet of the cosmogony of which was the degradation of a thought of God (Ἐννοία), chained by the spirits she had created, until she appeared as a degraded woman. She had appeared in many female forms, among others as Helen of Troy, and as Helena she accompanied Simon in his wanderings. Simon himself, as the primal Manifestation of the supreme God, had come to set the captive Ἐννοία free (Iren. B. I. 23. 3). All the manifestations of God as Father, Son, and Spirit, were only modes or δυνάμεις of the same God. Simon was unlike other Gnostics in claiming for himself the supreme place and power. He was ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη, Acts viii. 10. Hippolytus bases his description of the system on the Scripture of the Simonians called Ἀπόφασις μεγάλη, which he regards as a genuine work of Simon. It may have originated with his successor Menander (see Milman, Hist. of Christianity II. 50). In the system of Simon the Holy Ghost is female. This suggests the similar teaching in the baptismal invocation in the Apocryphal "Acts of Thomas," "Come, O Mother of compassion; Come, O Mother who revealest hidden mysteries, that we may attain to the rest which is in the Eighth Mansion." So also in the 'Gospel of the Hebrews' (see below), the Holy Spirit is called the Mother of Christ. The peculiarity of Simon's system is its subordinating Christ to the Gnostic himself.

Ibid. VI. 10. Ἀλλὰ περὶ τῆς ἐκκρίσεως αὐτοῦ καὶ διακρίσεως ἱζανῶς, φησὶν, εἴριζεν ἡ γραφή, καὶ πρὸς διδασκαλίαν ἀρκεῖ τοῖς ἐξαιτιονισμένοις τὸ λεχθέν· ὅτι πᾶσα σὰρξ χόρτος, καὶ πᾶσα δόξα σαρκὸς ὡς ἄνθρωπος χόρτος. Ἐξηράνθη ὁ χόρτος, καὶ τὸ ἄνθρωπος αὐτοῦ ἐξέπεσε· τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα Κυρίου μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. (1 Pet. i. 24, 25.)

Ibid. VI. 14. Τοῦτο ἐστὶ, φησὶ, τὸ εἰρημένον· Ἵνα μὴ σὺν τῷ κόσμῳ κατακριθῶμεν. (1 Cor. xi. 32.)

2. CERINTHUS.<sup>1</sup>

Epiaph. Haer. I. t. 2. h. 28. p. 113. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 383.) (Concerning the Cerinthians.) Χρῶνται γὰρ τῷ κατὰ Ματθαῖον Εὐαγγελίῳ ἀπὸ μέρους, καὶ οὐχὶ ὅλῳ· ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν γενεαλογίαν <sup>3</sup> Compare Iren. B. I. 23. 2: Hanc esse perditam ovem. The reference is to Helena, the impersonate captive Ennoea of Simon's system.

<sup>1</sup> There is little known with certainty about Cerinthus. He is the traditional opponent of the Apostle John, and is regarded as a Judæo-Christian Gnostic. The extracts in the text from Epiphanius are substantially confirmed by Hippolytus, VII. 33, and by Irenaeus, B. I. 26. 1; B. III. 11. 1; (B. III. 12. 7?). For some notice of his connection with the Apocalypse in tradition and in controversy see before, p. 343, "Caius." He is not mentioned by Justin, Clem. Alex., Tertullian, or Origen. He represented in Ephesus the Orientalism which regarded the unknown as the supreme source of all, and the material world as the work of inferior beings. He was the first noted man who confined Christ's redeeming work to enlightening the intellect. Ignorance, not perversity, becomes in this view the parent of sin. He professed to derive his knowledge from angelic revelation. There is every reason to accept the tradition which represents John as writing his Gospel to overthrow the errors of Cerinthus (Iren. B. III. 11. 1). Cerinthus, though he believed that the Aeon Christ descended upon the man Jesus at his Baptism, and ascended from Him before the crucifixion, believed also that the crucified Jesus rose from the dead (Iren. B. I. 26. 2). See Mansel's Gnosticism p. 115. The picturesqueness of the idea that Cerinthus, whom the Church regards as the chief enemy in the eye of the Fourth Evangelist, might be, notwithstanding, the author of the Gospel, has attracted M. Renan; but except that it is picturesque he has not much to suggest in support of it. (Renan, L'Eglise chrétienne, p. 53.)

τὴν ἑνσαρκον, καὶ ταύτην μαρτυρίαν φέρουσιν ἀπὸ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου, πάλιν λέγοντες ὅτι Ἀρχετὸν τῷ μαθητῇ ἵνα γένηται ὡς ὁ διδάσκαλος. (Mat. x. 25.) . . . Ὅσοι ἐν νόμῳ δικαιοῦσθε, τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἂν περιτέμνησθε, Χριστὸς ὁ μᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφελήσει. (Gal. v. 4, 2.)

<sup>1</sup> Irenaeus names Ophites among those who came up like mushrooms (B. I. 29. 1), and regards them as fathers and mothers of the school of Valentinus (B. I. 31. 3), and as predecessors of Valentinus (B. II. Preface). So also Hippolytus (VI. 6) sets the Ophites down as progenitors of subsequent sects, and among these he even reckons Simon Magus and his followers. They seem therefore to belong to the first century. Hippolytus says they originally called themselves "Naassenes" from the Hebrew (נָחָשׁ a serpent) (V. 6), but subsequently "Gnostics," alleging that they alone had the gift of knowledge. He says that they used the Gospel according to the Egyptians (V. 7. p. 136), which described the changes of the soul. He also shows at great length, and with bewildering minuteness, that the Naassenes, who falsely ascribed the origin of their system to James the Lord's brother through Mariamne, are really indebted for it to the ancient "mysteries" of Egypt and Phrygia (V. 7). There were several subdivisions of the Ophite Heresies: Peratae, Cainites, Sethians, and Justinians. They revered the serpent of O. T. history, whose opposition to the Creator of the world won their respect. It is superfluous to say that they were struggling with the old and ever new difficulty of the origin of evil, and of the connection of human sin with the material framework of the human body. In some of them we may see also the deification of mere intellect, for the Serpent was regarded as the intellectual emancipator of enslaved or imperfect man. From Bythos or primal Light, the Father of all and the first man, went forth Ἐννοία which produced a Son, the second man. Below those was the Holy Spirit—a female; and from the union of Father and Son with the Spirit was produced the third male—an incorruptible light—called Christ. Under those come the elements, and eventually the Serpent, from which come directly the spirit, the soul, and all mundane things. Those “endless genealogies” (1 Tim. i. 4) and the angel-worship (Col. ii. 18) may show us what wild notions were afloat in Phrygia and Asia Minor in St Paul’s day. Baur (Gnosis, pp. 118, 198) has drawn attention to the importance of the subdivisions of the Ophites,—all of them aiming at the development of the true principles which had been obscured or imprisoned in the Creation and Government of the world. Cain, the Sodomites, &c., were by most of them regarded as the overmatched upholders of the Truth. Christianity was the completion of those scattered and obscured lights. The ‘Gospel of Judas’ was current among some of them. Others looked back to Seth as the father of the spiritual species, and they maintained a more ordinary morality,—hence called Sethians. Some Gnostics kindred to the Ophites (Baur p. 193) had a “Gospel of Perfection”—τελειώσις—called also the Gospel of Eve, showing how the better state of things struggled for the mastery from the day of Eve till the Christian Era. Hippolytus, V. 6, quotes as the motto of the Naassenes, Ἀρχὴ τελειώσεως γυνῶσις, γνώσις ἀπηρτισμένη τελειώσις.

V. 7 (p. 142), which reminds us of Luke xvii. 4, but is not a quotation from Scripture: Καὶ τοῦτο ἐστὶ τὸ εἰρημένον, φησὶν, ἐν τῇ γραφῇ, ἐπτάκις πεσεῖται ὁ δίκαιος καὶ ἀναστήσεται. There is also a passage quoted (which follows the quotation given in the text from Luke xvii. 21) as from "the Gospel inscribed According to Thomas" which is not in the otherwise extant fragments of that Gospel (Tisch., Proleg. Evv. Apocr. p. XXXIX): Ἐμὲ ὁ ζήτων εὐρήσει ἐν παιδίῳ ἀπὸ ἐτῶν ἐπτά· ἐκεῖ γὰρ ἐν τῷ τεσσαρεσκαίδεκάτῳ αἰῶνι κρυβόμενος φανερούμαι. Hippolytus ascribes the passage "not to Christ, but to Hippocrates."

<sup>2</sup> That this book of Tractates is the same as that which Eusebius mentions and Clem. Alex. quotes, there is no reason to doubt. Archelaus lived in the time of the Emperor Probus, A.D. 277. His Disputation is mentioned by Jerome and Epiphanius. The quotation refers to the dual origin of things. Basilides—an Alexandrian—is here said to have taught in Persia, but we know too little about the great heretic to regard this as impossible.

<sup>4</sup> The use of χωροῦσι is peculiar; and there is no good reason to doubt the quotation from Matthew when it is found. It has no parallel in the N. Dixit enim, inquit, Apostolus, quia, “Ego vivebam sine lege aliquando,” hoc est, antequam in istud corpus venirem, in ea specie corporis vixi, quae sub lege non esset; pecudis scilicet vel avis. Ἐπεὶ οὖν ἔδει ἀποκαλυφθῆναι, φησὶν, ἡμᾶς τὰ τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ, περὶ ὧν ἐστέναξε, φησὶν, ἡ κτίσις καὶ ὁδινεν, ἀπεκδεχομένη τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν, ἤλθε τὸ εὐαγγέλιον εἰς τὸν κόσμον καὶ διῆλθε διὰ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ κυριότητος καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου. Ibid. VII. 26. (p. 372.) Αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ σοφία ἐν μυστηρίῳ λεγομένη, περὶ ἧς, φησὶν, ἡ γραφὴ λέγει· οὐκ ἐν διδασκατοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, ἀλλ' ἐν διδασκατοῖς πνεύματος. (1 Cor. ii. 7, 13.)

<sup>6</sup> It is not reasonable to say (Sup. Rel. II. 49) that "the variation in order is just what one might have expected from the use of the Gospel according to the Hebrews or a similar work," but not if Basilides quoted St Matthew. For why? Do the Fathers quote so carefully? Do even MSS of the Gospels not alter the order of clauses?

5. MARCION.<sup>1</sup>

1. DATE OF MARCION.

(Contemporary of Justin Martyr.) Justin Apol. I. c. 26. p. 70 A. Μαρκίωνα δὲ τινα Ποντικόν, ὁς καὶ νῦν ἔτι ἐστὶ

<sup>1</sup> Marcion. See before, Text, pp. 47, 50, 76-81 &c., and Notes on Marcion at pp. 75, 76, 77, 154, 162. Marcion's abrupt beginning (see below) gives ground for suspecting that there had been excision from an original, and further investigation proves the suspicion to be well founded. The fact that the omissions so often make the transition abrupt; the fact (so well brought out by Sanday) that in the omitted portions the "verified peculiarities of St Luke's style and diction are found in a proportion averaging considerably more than one to each verse," so that those 309 omitted verses are proved to be by the same writer as those which Marcion retained; and the consistent testimony of all the Fathers, give us as complete assurance as one can have on any such subject that Marcion's Gospel was a mutilated Luke. He called it The Gospel—or The Gospel of Christ. He accompanied it with ten Pauline Epistles which he called τὰ Ἀποστολικόν. He made fewer changes on the Epistles than on the Gospel, and professed to find his theology in St Paul. His cardinal principle was that Christ came from the Good God to overturn the kingdom of the Jewish God; and his aim was to make a Gospel which established this principle. His doctrine of the evil of matter led him to teach that marriage is ruin. See Hippolyt. Ref. Haer. VIII. 16. The whole text of Marcion's Gospel, as constructed by Hahn from the numerous and systematic quotations of Tertullian and Epiphanius, and from the more incidental references of Irenaeus, Origen, the Pseudo-Origen (Dial. de Recta Fide), and others, is found in Thilo's Codex Apocryphus, 1832. Hahn's elaborate work has a permanent value, though some of his conclusions have been overthrown by more recent investigations. Hilgenfeld in his "Kritische Untersuchungen über die Evangelien Justin's, der Clementinischen Homilien und Marcion's" (1850) has a list of the omissions in St Luke made by Marcion. Volkmar, in "Das Evangelium Marcion's" (1852), has given a full outline of the contents of the Gospel. In this work Volkmar expanded and defended his earlier articles (Tübing. Zeitsch. 1850). Anger's "Synopsis" contains almost full references to all the passages altered by Marcion. Roensch's "Das Neue Test. Tertullians" contains much interesting discussion. Reference is made below to "Supernatural Religion" and Dr Sanday's "Gospels &c." There is an excellent and suggestive statement in the Archbishop of York's (Thomson's) "Synoptic Gospels," republished from "The Speaker's Commentary" in his admirable volume "Word, Work and Will" (1879). These works and others have been used in compiling the following chapter, which, it is hoped, contains what the student seeks most to know regarding the great Gnostic critic. After some general quotations, with a rubric to each showing its bearing, a full list is given of Marcion's alterations of Luke's Gospel, with notes showing upon what principle the alterations were made in each case. This is a slight departure from the ordinary plan of this work, in which the original passages are all given. The extraordinary length of the quotations and remarks διδάσκων τοὺς πειθόμενους ἄλλον τινα νομίζειν μεῖζονα τοῦ δημιουργοῦ Θεόν· ὃς κατὰ πᾶν γένος ἀνθρώπων διὰ τῆς τῶν δαιμόνων συλλήψεως πολλοὺς πεποιήκε βλασφημίας λέγειν καὶ ἀρνεῖσθαι τὸν ποιητὴν τοῦδε τοῦ παντός Θεόν, ἄλλον δέ τινα, ὃς ὄντα μεῖζονα, τὰ μεῖζονα παρὰ τοῦτον ὁμολογεῖν πεποιγμένοι. So also Ap. I. c. 58. p. 92 A.

2. TESTIMONY OF THE FATHERS TO THE CHARACTER AND OBJECT OF MARCION'S WORK.

Justin, Apol. I. 26; I. 58 [as above under 1.]

Iren. B. I. 27. 2. [In Eus. H. E. IV. 11 are the first words Μαδεξάμενος δὲ αὐτὸν Μαρζίων ὁ Πορτιζὸς, ἠΐξῃσε τὸ διδασκαλεῖον, ἀπειρωθριασμένως βλασφημιῶν.] Succeedens autem ei (sc. Cerdoni) Marcion Ponticus, ad ampliavit doctrinam, impudorate blasphemans eum, qui a lege et prophetis annuntiatus est Deus; malorum factorem et bellorum concupiscentem et inconstantem quoque sententia, et contrarium sibi ipsum dicens. Jesum autem ab eo Patre, qui est super mundi fabricatorem Deum, venientem in Judaeam temporibus Pontii Pilati praesidis, qui fuit procurator Tiberii Caesaris, in hominis forma manifestatum his qui in Judaea erant, dissolventem prophetas et legem et omnia opera ejus Dei, qui mundum fecit, quem et Cosmocratorem dicit. Et of Tertullian and Epiphanius makes it impossible to reproduce them all here. And moreover, in this case the facts are not disputed. It is more important to collect them than to discuss them.

There are few more conclusive results attained in Biblical criticism than that which Volkmar achieved as against Ritschl, Baur, and Schwegler, who had argued for the priority of Marcion to the canonical Luke. Semler had conjectured that Marcion perhaps used a shorter Gospel, and Eichhorn had argued that the canonical Luke was a later edition of Marcion; but the Tübingen scholars made of it a great controversy. Volkmar had the satisfaction of finding his chief opponents publicly withdraw from their positions in consequence of his work. Hilgenfeld's independent investigations led him almost at the same time to the same conclusions as Volkmar; and he has stated them with characteristic force and brevity. The author of "Supernatural Religion," who in his earlier editions (as stated in our notes pp. 47 &c., which were printed off before the publication of his "Complete Edition" 1879) advocated the priority of Marcion to Luke, has (1879) modified his views, owing to the irresistible linguistic argument of Dr Sanday in his "Gospels in the Second Century," and has made frank admission of the change. His statement of the case on the other side remains, however—somewhat inconsistently—and may be consulted with advantage. Dr Sanday's is the last contribution of importance to the long controversy.

Some of Marcion's various readings—those in V. 14, 39; XII. 14, 38; XVII. 2; XXI. 27; XXIII. 2, have considerable support in Latin and Syriac versions and in D. See Tisch., Greek Test.; and compare Sanday, p. 231.

super haec, id quod est secundum Lucam Evangelium circumcidens, et omnia quae sunt de generatione Domini conscripta auferens, et de doctrina sermonum Domini multa auferens, in quibus manifestissime conditorem hujus universitatis suum Patrem confitens Dominus conscriptus est; semetipsum esse veraciorē, quam sunt hi, qui evangelium tradiderunt, apostoli, suasit discipulis suis; non evangelium, sed particulam evangelii tradens eis. Similiter autem et apostoli Pauli epistolas abscidit, auferens quaecumque manifeste dicta sunt ab apostolo de eo Deo, qui mundum fecit, quoniam hic Pater Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et quaecumque ex prophetis memorans apostolus docuit, praenuntiantibus adventum Domini. (Marcion in his Antitheses, quite distinct from his Gospel, expounded the New Testament as contradicting the Old.) Tert. Adv. Marc. I. 19. Separatio legis et evangelii proprium et principale opus est Marcionis, nec poterunt negare discipuli ejus quod in summo instrumento habent, quo denique initiantur et indurantur in hanc haeresim. Nam hae sunt Antitheses Marcionis, id est contrariae oppositiones, quae conantur discordiam evangelii cum lege committere, ut ex diversitate sententiarum utriusque instrumenti diversitatem quoque argumententur deorum. (See also Adv. Marc. IV. 6; before, p. 81.)

admissa carne nativitatem negare, ut Apelles discipulus et postea desertor ipsius, aut et carnem et nativitatem confessus aliter illas interpretari, ut condiscipulus et condesertor ejus Valentinus.

C. 2. His opinor consiliis, tot originalia instrumenta Christi delere, Marcion, ausus es, ne caro ejus probaretur. Ex quo, oro te? Exhibe auctoritatem. Si propheta es, praenuntia aliquid; si apostolus, praedica publice; si apostolicus, cum apostolis senti; si tantum Christianus es, crede quod traditum est. Si nihil istorum es, merito dixerim, morere! Nam et mortuus es, qui non es Christianus, non credendo quod creditum Christianos facit. Et eo magis mortuus es, quo magis non es Christianus; qui cum fuisses, excidisti, rescindendo quod retro credidisti, sicut et ipse confiteris in quadam epistola<sup>1</sup>, et tui non negant et nostri probant. Igitur rescindens quod credidisti, jam non credens rescidisti; non tamen quia credere desiisti, recte rescidisti, atquin rescindendo quod credidisti, probas, antequam rescinderes, aliter fuisse. Quod credidisti aliter, illud ita erat traditum; porro quod traditum erat, id erat verum, ut ab eis traditum, quorum fuit tradere. Ergo quod erat traditum, rescindens, quod erat verum rescidisti.

3. CONTENTS OF MARCION'S GOSPEL. (See note on p. 390.)

Luke I. II. omitted entirely.

[Marcion did not find that the Preface suited his purpose. He did not admit that John was the forerunner of the true Christ, but regarded him as representing the God of the Old Testament. All reference to his miraculous birth was therefore expunged. He retained v. 33; vii. 18, &c.; ix. 7, 19; xi. 1; xx. 4-6. But all these can be explained in conformity with his principles. The Birth and Nativity of our Lord were not allowed to remain on the record, because Marcion could not admit that Christ came in the flesh.]

III. 1, combined with IV. 31, made the opening words of Marcion's Gospel:

Ἐν ἔτει πεντεκαδεκάτῳ τῆς ἡγεμονίας Τιβερίου Καίσαρος [ἡγεμονεύοντος Πορείου Πιλάτου τῆς Ἰουδαίας] ὁ Θεὸς κατέβη εἰς Καφαρναούμ, πόλιν τῆς Γαλιλαίας, καὶ ἦν διδάσκων ἐν τοῖς σάββασι.

[The words in brackets are added on the testimony of the Pseudo-Origen, Dial. de recta fide, Sect. II. 823 B. Migne, p. 1765 (ἐπὶ τῶν χρόνων Πιλάτου). All the authorities agree that Marcion's Gospel began with Luke iii. 1, and it appears that he added the words of iv. 31 so as to make it appear that Christ descended from heaven to the synagogue of Capernaum. Κατέβηεν has therefore a very different meaning from that which Luke gives it. There is doubt as to the nominative to κατέβηεν. Tertullian says proponit Deum descendisse. Epiphanius has his usual καὶ τὰ ἐξῆς without being definite. Hahn has ὁ Θεός, Volkmar ὁ Ἰησοῦς.]

III. 1-38 omitted. (See Epiph. Haer. 42. § 11. p. 312. Migne, p. 711.)

[Marcion could take no cognisance of the Baptist's preaching, nor could he admit that Christ was baptized by an O. T. prophet: vv. 20-22 had no meaning for Marcion.]

IV. 1-13 omitted. (See Epiph. Haer. 42. Ref. 60. p. 343. Migne, p. 760.)

[The Temptation would have been an empty formality in Marcion's view (Hilg.), also too like Israel in the wilderness (Baur), and Christ did not come to fulfil the Old Testament.]

IV. 14, 15 omitted.

16. οὗ ἦν τεθραμμένος omitted.

17-19 omitted. vv. 20, 21, may have been retained.

22. καὶ ἔλεγον· οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ omitted.

23. ἐν τῇ πατρίδι σου omitted.

Luke IV. 24. omitted.

34. Ναζαρηνέ omitted.

[Christ would be of the earth if "Nazarene" were retained. Marcion omitted all mention of N. as Christ's birthplace. Compare Luke xviii. 37, xxiv. 19. Epiphanius does not say that the word was omitted in those cases, but Tert. Adv. Marcion (IV. 8) seems to say so. The Pseudo-Origen (Dial. de recta fide, p. 858 C; Migne, p. 1852) distinctly says so. Ναζωραῖος might not be in Marcion's opinion the same as Ναζαρηνός, but he seems to have expunged both, and Tert. (IV. 8) regards them as the same—a native of Nazareth.]

Marcion opened his narrative in the following order:

III. 1 combined with IV. 31. Then came IV. 32-39. 16 (curtailed) [20, 21] (?) 22 (curtailed). 23, [27] (??) 28, 29, 30, 40-44.

[There is not absolute agreement as to the exact words with which Marcion's excisions in this chapter began and ended.]

V. 14. ὑμῖν for αὐτοῖς.

[Not a mere variation (Hilg.), but to draw more emphatically the line between Christ and the servants of the Demiurge to whom the healed person belonged (Volkmär). Tert. IV. 9 says, Ut sit vobis in testimonium. So Epiph. Haer. 42. § 11. p. 312, "Ἰνα ἡ μαρτύριον τοῦτο ὑμῖν. In Cod. D the reading is "Ἰνα εἰς μαρτύριον ἡ ὑμῖν τοῦτο: Ut sit in testimonium vobis hoc. See Sanday, Gospels in Second Century, p. 231, for other codd. Some of the pernicious readings with which Epiph. p. 312 charges Marcion are merely variations in the order of words, as in V. 28, &c.]

V. 39. omitted (probably).

[The omission of the early chapters makes the introduction of John in V. 33 abrupt, and Tert. (IV. 11) does not fail to say that Marcion makes John appear as suddenly as Christ.]

VI. 17. ἐν αὐτοῖς for μετ' αὐτῶν. See Epiph. p. 312. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 712.)

23. ὑμῶν for αὐτῶν (Epiph.), but Tert. reads eorum (αὐτῶν).

VII. 31-35.

[The author of Supernatural Religion had a discussion of this passage beginning, "It is generally agreed that the verses Luke vii. 29-35 were wanting in Marcion's Gospel." In his "Complete Edition" he has altered this into, "Some critics believe that the verses Luke vii. 29-35 were wanting in Marcion's Gospel." But his note is not clear, and the discussion in his text remains. It may therefore be well to say that Tertullian found nothing to remark upon in the verses, and therefore passed them by. Epiphanius is silent because Marcion's Gospel did not omit them. Volkmär and Hilgenfeld believe that Marcior's Gospel contained them. The critics who omit the verses are therefore Hahn, who founds on the silence of Tertullian, and (a mistake as to) the bearing of Marcion's system; and Ritschl, who would omit 29, 30 as well as 31-35, because he does not think them properly connected with the context.]

Luke VIII. 19. omitted.

21. Inserted: τίς μου ἡ μήτηρ καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί;

[By leaving out verse 19 Marcion got rid of the Evangelist's statement: "There came to Him His mother and His brethren;" and the other verses thereafter witness in favour of Marcion's system. To make this witness more clear, he inserted from Matthew or Mark: "Who are my mother and my brethren?" This is an illustration of what Marcion did when alteration served his purpose better than simple omission. (See Hilg. p. 451.) It appears that the allegation of the Heretics was that Temptandi gratia nuntiaverant ei matrem et fratres, quos non habebat. (Tert. De Carne Christi, c. 7.) Tertullian in that passage and in Adv. Marc. IV. 19 says that this question, "Who are my mother,?" &c. was the most constant argument of Marcion, and of "all" who denied the Incarnation.]

IX. 40. Epiphanius (Sch. 19) notes some change obscurely.

X. 4. Marcion perhaps read ῥάβδον. (Hilg.)

21. Marcion omitted καὶ τῆς γῆς.

[He could not retain an expression which called the Father of Christ "Lord of earth." In XII. 22-31 he retains the care of this world under the Creator; but in the present passage Christ was addressing His God, and Marcion omitted the phrase connecting that God with the earth.]

22. Marcion changed the order and had the Aorist, his text being apparently: Οὐδεὶς ἔγνω τίς ἐστιν ὁ πατήρ, εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱός, καὶ τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱός, εἰ μὴ ὁ πατήρ, καὶ ὃ ἐὰν, κ.τ.λ.

[This reading depends mainly on Irenaeus, B. IV. 6. 1. Nemo cognovit Patrem, nisi Filius, nec Filius, nisi Pater et cui voluerit Filius revelare. Irenaeus shows that it was not only the Marcionite, but a common Gnostic, reading; obviously because the Aorist permitted (if it did not suggest) an Anti-Old-Testament meaning, as though the True God had not been known before the coming of Christ. The Aorist however was common enough among orthodox Fathers. See before, notes on Justin, pp. 60, 118. See full list in Anger's Synopsis in loc. Pseudo-Origen, Dial. de recta fide, p. 817, has οὐδεὶς ἔγνω τὸν π. . . οὐδὲ τὸν υἱόν τις γινώσκει . . . which is the most consistent reading from Marcion's point of view.]

[Marcion could not admit any connection between the Law of the O. T. and Eternal Life. In c. XVIII. 18 the word αἰώνιον is retained, but in that case the insufficiency of the commandments is shown.]

XI. 2. Instead of Ἀγιασθήτω τὸ ὄνομά σου, Marcion read Ἐλθέτω τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμά σου ἐφ' ἡμᾶς.

[This rests on Tert. Adv. Marc. IV. 26, and is not quite clear. Tisch. argues (see Gr. Test. in loc.) that Marcion really read ἀγασθήτω, &c. &c. Greg. Nyss. has ἐλθέτω τὸ ἄγ. πν.—The author of Sup. Rel. II. 126 says that this “is recognized to be the true original reading”!]

29-32. Omitted εἰ μὴ τὸ σημεῖον Ἰωῶ—τὸ κλεῖον Ἰωῶ ὥδε, vv. 29-32.

42. Marcion read κλησιν for κρίσιν.

[It appears that Marcion did not wish to connect Judgment with the Good God. Tertullian's argument on the passage does not seem to make κλησιν = hospitality (as it is sometimes translated in this case), but connects vocationem with dilectionem Dei (IV. 27), so as to make it appear that it means calling, calling by God. His argument is that Christ says nothing against the Law, but denounces those who misunderstood it: further, that what Marcion retains regarding Christ is the same as the O. T. revelation of God; ascribing to him the function of judging (condemning), and caring for both external and internal conduct. See XVI. 19-31. Marcion interpreted the passage as referring to the Creator's Hell, and supposed v. 29 to be spoken of the Jews only. See Epiph. Sch. et Ref. 44-46.]

49-51. omitted.

[Marcion could not put the prophets of the O. T. and the apostles of the N. T. on the same footing, as in this passage. Σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ was ascribed to the O. T. The wonder is that he retained so much of this section of S. Luke. He has elsewhere retained quotations from the O. T. like VI. 3 (mere dialectic in his opinion); VII. 27 (merely the Baptist as forerunner of Christ whom the Demiurge would send); XX. 41-44—like XX. 4—(merely an appeal to embarrass the Jews). (See Hilg. p. 452.)]

XII. 6 (7?). omitted.

[Tertullian passes by those words (IV. 28). Epiphanius, Sch. 29, says that Marcion omitted v. 6; but he makes no mention of v. 7. The verses seem to stand or fall together. Marcion would ascribe v. 5 to the Demiurge into whose hands would fall all unbelievers in Christ. V. 6 (and in some measure v. 7) must have seemed to him to confuse the spheres of Christ and the Creator.]

8. 9. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ instead of ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων τοῦ Θεοῦ.

[See below, on XV. 10.]

10. omitted ἢ μεριστήν. (Tert. IV. 28.)

28. omitted (Epiph.), not omitted (Tertullian).

[It is possible that the Marcionites had omitted those words before Epiphanius wrote, though Marcion himself had not.]

Luke XII. 32. ἡμῶν omitted. See Epiph. Sch. 34.

38. τῇ ἑσπερινῇ φυλακῇ instead of ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ φυλακῇ καὶ ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ φυλακῇ. See Epiph. Sch. 35.

[Epiphanius says ὁ κτηνώδης forgets that watches are all during the night, and that there is no evening one. But the first of the night watches might be called the evening watch.]

XIII. 1-5; 6-9 omitted.

[Epiphanius is somewhat ambiguous, as it is uncertain whether the parable of the fig-tree is included in the omission. Tertullian (c. 30) passes direct from XII. 59 to XIII. 10. Hilgenfeld only omits vv. 1-5; but Hahn, Volkmar and Anger omit also 6-9.]

28. Marcion read: Ὅτε πάντα τοὺς διζαίους ἴδῃτε ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡμᾶς δὲ ἐκβαλλομένους καὶ κρατουμένους ἔξω. ἐκεῖ ἔσται ὁ κλαυθμὸς, καὶ ὁ βρυγμὸς τῶν ὀδόντων. Epiph. Sch. 40.

29-35. omitted.

[Verses 29, 30 show that it is the same God as in the O. T. who now puts the heathen in the place of the Jews. Verses 31-35 represent Christ as the God and the Messiah of the Jews. Ritschl and Baur regarded the omission of the whole as a proof of the originality of Marcion's Gospel.]

XIV. 26. καταλείπει instead of μισεῖ.

XV. 10. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ instead of ἐν τῶν ἀγγέλων τοῦ Θεοῦ.

[Marcion understood this of the Lord God. Tertullian (c. 32) teaches that it must refer to the Creator, the Same who long ago proclaimed His longing that the sinner should not die but repent.]

11-32. The Prodigal Son. Omitted.

[This was omitted because of representing the Supreme God as in the same relation of Father to both Jews and heathen. It was not because of his repugnance to feasting that Marcion omitted the parable. He retains some non-ascetic passages, as the Bridegroom, V. 34; the wedding, XII. 36; XIV. 8; the heavenly feast, XIV. 15-24. See Hilg. p. 454; Volkmar p. 66.]

XVI. 12. Marcion read ἐμόν for ἡμέτερον. (Tert. c. 33.)

17. Marcion altered ἡ τοῦ νόμου.

[Ἡ τῶν λόγων μου instead of ἡ τοῦ νόμου (so Ritschl, Volkmar, Hilgenfeld). They rest on Tertullian. But Tertullian is uncertain. He says (c. 33) in one place: Transeat igitur coelum et terra citius, sicut et lex et prophetae, quam unus apex verborum Domini. But again he says: Idco subtexuit facilius elementa transitura quam verba sua. Epiphanius passes it by and comments on V. 16. Hahn renders Tertullian into Greek, . . . παρελθεῖν, ὡς καὶ ὁ νόμος καὶ οἱ προφῆται, ἢ τῶν λόγων τοῦ Κυρίου μίαν κεραίαν πεσεῖν. So also Anger.]

XVII. 2. εἰ οὐκ ἐγεννήθη added. Tert. IV. 35.

10. omitted. Epiph. Sch. 47.

[Hahn omits 7-10 mainly on the ground of the silence of Tertullian, but partly also because of Marcion's asceticism, to which feasting was repugnant. As regards the latter ground see before, note on XV. 11-32; and Tertullian's silence is not enough to cause the omission.]

14. Epiphanius says, Sch. 48: 'Οιε συνήντησαν οἱ δέκα λεπροί. Ἀπέκονψε δὲ πολλὰ καὶ ἐποίησεν. Ἀπέστειλεν αὐτοὺς, λέγων· Δεῖξατε ἐαυτοὺς τοῖς ἱερεῦσι· καὶ ἄλλα ἀν' ἄλλον ἐποίησε, λέγων, ὅτι Πολλοὶ λεπροὶ ἦσαν ἐν ἡμέραις Ἐλισσαίου τοῦ προφήτου, καὶ οὐκ ἐκαθαρίσθη εἰ μὴ Νεεμιᾶν ὁ Σῦρος.

[That is to say, Marcion introduced here Luke iv. 27. Epiphanius twits Marcion with making a quotation in which the Lord calls Elisha a prophet. Hilgenfeld reads the passage thus: Καὶ ἰδὼν εἶπεν αὐτοῖς· Πολλοὶ λεπροὶ ἦσαν ἐν ἡμέραις . . . ὁ Σῦρος (iv. 27.) πορευθέντες ἐπιδείξατε ἐαυτοὺς τοῖς ἱερεῦσι. This is better than Hahn's which is v. 14; iv. 27; vv. 15, 16, 17, &c. Tertullian (c. 35) seems to say that nothing essential was wanting in Marcion's text.]

XVIII. 19. Μὴ με λέγε ἀγαθόν· Εἷς ἐστιν ἀγαθός, ὁ Θεὸς ὁ πατήρ.

[Marcion added ὁ πατήρ to distinguish the Supreme God from the Demiurge, who, though God, was not Father. See on the reading Μὴ με λέγε, x. τ. λ. before, p. 116, Notes 6, 7.]

31-34. omitted. Epiph. Sch. 52.

[Omitted, as Marcion could not admit that Christ's death fulfilled O. T. prophecy. In the same way xxii. 35-38, and xxiv. 25, 27, 32, 44, 45 were omitted. On the other hand Marcion retained, vii. 27, &c., because he identified John the Baptist with the rule of the Demiurge, and could therefore admit that Malachi, an O. T. prophet, predicted his coming. Marcion also retained x. 25; xi. 42; v. 34, there being in each case no identification of Christ with the Law.]

37. Marcion omitted Ναζωραῖος. See before, on IV. 34.

XIX. 9. Marcion omitted (apparently) καθόρι καὶ αὐτὸς υἱὸς Ἀβραάμ ἐστιν. So Tert. c. 37. Epiph. is silent.

29-46. Epiph. Sch. 53.

[Epiphanius says that the omission was to σπήλαιον ληστῶν. Tert. (c. 37) is silent as to the whole of the chapter after v. 27. Hilgenfeld and Volkmar omit also vv. 47. 48.]

Luke XX. 1(β)-18. omitted.

[Epiphanius is obscure, but it appears as though Marcion read v. 1: Ἐγένετο ἐν μιᾷ τῶν ἡμερῶν διδάσκοντος αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, ἐζήτησαν ἐπιβαλεῖν ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὰς χεῖρας καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν; thus connecting v. 1(α) with v. 19(α). He must have omitted also v. 19(β), ἔγνωσαν γὰρ . . . εἶπεν, as depending on what went before.

35. Reference to Resurrection omitted.

37. 38. omitted.

[The doctrine bearing on the O. T. was displeasing to Marcion. Epiphanius (Ref. 56, 57) puts this parable beside that of Lazarus (Ref. 52), and speaks of it as "a repetition" of the same doctrine]

XXI. (18.) 21. 22. omitted. See Epiph. Sch. 58. 59.

27. μετὰ πολλῆς δυνάμεως [καὶ δόξης]. (Tert. IV. 39.)

36. omitted Καὶ σταθῆναι ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου.

XXII. 3. omitted.

[Tert. V. 6 says: Scriptum est enim apud me Satanam in Judam introisse, which can only mean that in Marcion's Gospel this incident was omitted. See also Epiph. Sch. 60, with which this conclusion is at least not inconsistent. Marcion's theory that Christ was opposed to the Creator made it difficult for him to find a place for Satan as the Tempter.]

16. 17. 18. 30 (?). omitted.

[There is much difficulty in accounting for, or even enumerating, Marcion's omissions. He certainly retained the direction to Peter to prepare the Passover,—Epiph. Sch. 61. He also retained v. 15, Epiph. Sch. and Ref. 62. And the mere fact of his leaving that verse in such a position shows that Luke's was the original text which he mutilated. (Hilg. p. 472.) But it is not certain whether he omitted vv. 17. 18. It seems most likely that he omitted the whole 16-18, in order to leave no trace of the connection between the O. T. feast and the Institution of the Lord's Supper. What was left therefore pointed to an act of remembrance (v. 19) in which was no trace of bodily communion. Jesus took the Bread—a mere symbol of the Body which was itself a semblance—and said, "Do this in remembrance of me." He probably omitted v. 30 also, lest it should point to carnal views of His Kingdom. (See however Hilgenf. p. 433.) All this seems the most probable account of Marcion's proceedings. But it leaves the reference to "this Passover" in v. 15 as unaccountable as Epiphanius (Ref. 62) says it is. By leaving it, Marcion really undid all his undoing; and the Christian Sacrament remains connected with the Jewish Passover. Epiphanius does not say (Sch. 63) that Marcion omitted more than v. 16, but his reasoning (Ref. 63) shows that the omission went on to the end of v. 18, ὅνα δῆθεν μὴ ποιήσῃ ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ βρωτὰ ἢ ποτά.]

35-38. omitted.

[The reference to O. T. prophecy caused the omission. Epiph. Sch. 64 does not define the close of the omission, saying merely καὶ τὰ ἐξῆς. But v. 38 was too like the Jewish Messiah to be admitted. See Volkmar, p. 69.]

49-51. omitted.

[Epiphanius argues that Marcion was anxious for Peter's honour, and obscured the Saviour's. Epiphanius seems to forget that the Synoptists do not say Peter was the disciple. The motive of the omission is not clear. See Volkmar, p. 70, Hilg. p. 457.]

XXIII. 2. Marcion read: Τοῦτον εὗρομεν διαστρέφοντα τὸ ἔθνος, [καὶ καταλύοντα τὸν νόμον καὶ τοὺς προφῆτας] καὶ κελεύοντα φόβους μὴ δοῦναι [καὶ ἀναστρέφοντα τὰς γυναῖκας καὶ τὰ τέκνα], where the passages in brackets are additions to the text. They are found in some Latin MSS. (See Sanday, 'Gospels in Second Century,' p. 232.)

34. The conclusion of the verse from διαμεριζόμενοι was wanting in Tertullian's copy of the Marcionite Gospel, but remained in Epiphanius's copy.

[Marcion's reason for omitting it is uncertain. Marcion retained the parable XVI. 19-31 as referring to the Creator's Hades, in which there were different grades of suffering; but he did not allow that Christ went there. The Marcionite in Dial. de recta fide p. 827 C. says that Abraham was in Hades but not in the Kingdom of Heaven. See Hilg. p. 469, Volkmar p. 100, for notes showing utter perplexity. But Marcion probably did not wish to identify the future of the Divine Christ with that of this human believer.]

XXIV. 25. Marcion read ἐφ' οἷς ἐλάλησεν [ἐλάλησα (by mistake in Epiph.)] ἰμῖν instead of ἐλάλησαν οἱ προφῆται. See Tert. IV. 43.

[Probably 27, 32, 44(β)-46(α) were omitted; v. 47 was retained to ἐὼς; 47(β to 53) omitted. It appears as though both Tertullian and Epiphanius were tired noting the many variations, and became remiss at the end of their work on Marcion's Gospel. It appears certain that he retained vv. 37 to 39. Both Tertullian and Epiphanius show how inconsistent with Marcion's central position of the unreality of Christ's body this passage is; unless indeed (as Tertullian suggests) he interpreted v. 39 to mean that if they looked at Christ (it seems that Marcion omitted ψηλαφήσατε) they would see that He was a spirit without flesh and bones. But what of v. 41, which seems to have been retained? Irenaeus (B. III. 14. 3, 4) distinctly says that both Marcion and Valentinus retain "all the things which He said after the resurrection to His disciples on the way, and how they knew Him in the breaking of bread." He adds, naturally enough, that they must either accept more of the Gospel when they retain so much, or give up even what they have. Hilgenfeld says, Marcion omitted v. 27 wholly, the close of v. 32, and omitted, or at least much shortened, vv. 44, 45. Volkmar's list is 27, 32 (close), 44 (partly), 45, 46 (partly). It appears from Tertullian's closing words that, according to Marcion, Christ commanded the disciples to preach to all nations; and Epiphanius (Haer. 42 C. 9. p. 305, Migne, Vol. I. p. 708) says that Marcion cut off the close of the Gospel as well as its beginning. We conclude therefore that his Gospel ended with a paragraph made up, as above, from 44(β)-47(α) and that its last word was ἐὼν. Tertullian's characteristic conclusion is: Misereor tui, Marcion: frustra laborasti. Christus enim Jesus in Evangelio tuo meus est. Tert. Adv. Marc. IV. 43.]

MARCION'S APOSTOLICON.

[Marcion's changes on the Ten Pauline Epistles in his Apostolicon may be thus represented.

Galatians I. 1. Καὶ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς omitted (Jerome). And apparently ἐαυτὸν for αὐτόν.

7. Κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου inserted after ἄλλο. Εἰς ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ after μεταστρέψαι, instead of τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Dial. de recta fide p. 9. (This, however, may not have been by Marcion, though quoted by a Marcionite.)

III. 6-9. 14. 16-18 omitted (?).

(Tert. Adv. Marc. V. 3. says on v. 26—Sed et cum adjicit: Omnes enim filii estis fidei, ostenditur quid supra haeretica industria eraserit, mentionem scilicet Abrahae, qua nos apostolus filios Abrahae per fidem affirmat, secundum quam mentionem hic quoque filios fidei notavit. It seems from this as if all mention of Abraham were omitted. Lardner (IV. 619) conjectures that Marc. omitted from III. 14 to IV. 3; so as to read: "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men—when we were yet children," &c. Tert. reads this in Adv. Marc. IV. 1; but the quotation from III. 26 makes Lardner's supposition untenable. Marcion may have repeated "when we were yet children" at IV. 3.)

<sup>1</sup> This is a mistake, as Epiphanius (see before, p. 394) and others tell us that Marcion had only Ten Epistles in his Ἀποστολικόν. This list is also curious in enumerating both Ephesians and Laodiceans. It is possible that in Tertullian's time Ephesians was in Marcion's Canon as 'Laodiceans;' while in the later days of Epiphanius, there were some fragments added to the Apostolicon called 'Laodiceans.' As appears in the text, below, Tertullian did not find some of the Epistles in Marcion's book so completely corrupted as Epiphanius found them.

V. 9. δοῶσι for ζυμοῖ. Epiph. Sch. 4 (on Gal.) p. 351. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 776.)

1 Corinthians. IX. 8. Εἰ καὶ ὁ νόμος Μωϋσέως ταῦτα οὐ λέγει for Καὶ ὁ νόμος ταῦτα οὐ λέγει. Epiph. p. 321. (Migne p. 721.) (Epiph. says afterwards (Sch. 7 and 15. p. 355) that the change was the insertion of Μωϋσέως in the next clause, ἐν τῷ νόμῳ.)

X. 9. Χριστόν for Κύριον. Ibid. p. 358. (Migne p. 788.) (This is the reading in many old MSS.)

19. ἱερόσυτον for εἰδωλόσυτον. Ibid.

XIV. 19. διὰ τὸν νόμον for τῷ νοῦ μου. Ibid. p. 361. (Migne p. 792.)

[Note. In 1 Cor. xv. 38 the Marcionite had πνεῦμα for σῶμα; and omitted 38 (b)—42 (a) and introduced 44 before 42 (b). In v. 45 Κύριος for Ἀδὰμ, and omitted ἄνθρωπος in the latter clause. So at least it appears in Dial. de recta fide, pp. 864, 868.]

2 Cor. IV. 13. omitted κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον. Epiph. p. 367. (Migne p. 801.)

Romans. Omitted chapters XV. XVI. (Origen, Can. in Rom. lib. X. p. 687. Migne, p. 1290. Only in the Latin of Rufinus.)

1 and 2 Thess Epiphanius says that the whole was so corrupted by Marcion that he made no quotation: p. 371. Migne (p. 807).

Tert. V. 15 says Marcion added ἰδίους in 1 Thess. ii. 15 (but this is in many MSS). He also says, V. 16, that Marcion omitted ἐν πυρὶ φλογός (2 Thess. ii. 8).

Ephesians (called Laodiceans). Epiphanius (p. 372, Migne p. 809) says that in Eph. v. 31 Marcion omitted τῇ γυναίκι. Tertullian (c. 17) also notices, ii. 15, the omission of αὐτοῦ after σαρκί; ii. 20, omission of προφητῶν. iii. 9, omitted ἐν (apparently under the idea that it would then read "hidden from God").

Colossians. No distinct charge of alteration made against Marcion.

Philemon. Tert. V. 21 says Marcion altered every Epistle save Philemon; but Epiphanius says it was wholly depraved by Marcion.

Philippians. Epiphanius says this also was hopelessly corrupted. Tertullian quotes some passages, and makes no specific charge of corruption.

Epiphanius (p. 374, Migne p. 812) gives as an extract from what he found appended to the Apostolicon from the so-called "Laodiceans" what (as he says) is equivalent to Eph. iv. 5, but with the addition of εἰς Χριστός after βάπτισμα.

The Pastoral Epistles and Hebrews were rejected by Marcion.

The foregoing shows that Marcion's changes on such Pauline Epistles as he received were few; and that his omissions were few and (save from Gal. iii. and Romans xv. and xvi.) unimportant. It is impossible to reconcile Romans, as he allowed it to be, with his system—or even the mutilated Galatians.]

Ibid. 2. Ea[m] igitur quae similiter atque illa Jesu anima, potest contemnere mundi fabricatores archontas, similiter accipere virtutes ad operandum similia. Quapropter et ad tantum elationis proveci sunt, ut quidam quidem similes sese dicant Jesu; quidam autem adhuc et secundum aliquid illo fortiores, qui sunt distantes amplius quam illius discipuli, ut puta quam Petrus et Paulus et reliqui apostoli; hos autem in nullo deminorari a Jesu. . . . <sup>1</sup> Carpocrates. The most biographical account of Carpocrates is in Clem. Alex. Strom. III. 2. p. 511. There is a long account of his doctrine in Irenaeus, B. I. 25, which Hippolytus reproduces (Haer. VII. 32); and Epiphanius (Haer. 27) expands. See also references in Iren. B. II. 31 and following chapters. He was a contemporary of Basilides. He seems to have taught a doctrine of human perfectibility; and some of his followers claimed to be of higher spiritual attainments than the Apostles. This easily led to Antinomianism, and practical immorality, especially of the sexual kind. According to Clement, their principles were of the most licentious character. Their relation to the Scriptures is not easily established; but the natural inference from the arguments of Clement and Irenaeus is, that they accepted the New Testament. See Rom. iii. 20, vii. 7, and Mat. v. 28, quoted in Clement, by himself or by them, as of admitted authority. Clement's chapter is not one that can be easily quoted here. At all events, rejection of the New Testament is not charged against them; and the extract from Epiphanius in our text shows that they accepted Matthew's Gospel with some excision. It will be seen that Irenaeus speaks of the Carpo-

migrationes in corpora oportere in omni vita et in omni actu fieri animas: . . . uti, secundum quod scripta eorum dicunt, in omni usu vitae factae animae ipsorum, exeuntes, in nihilo adhuc minus habeant, ad operandum (autem) in eo: ne forte, propterea quod deest libertati aliqua res, cogantur iterum mitti in corpus. Propter hoc dicunt Jesum hanc dixisse parabolam: Cum es cum adversario tuo in via, da operam, ut libereris ab eo, ne forte te det iudici, et iudex ministro, et mittat te in carcerem. Amen dico tibi, non exies inde, donec reddas novissimum quadrantem. (Mat. v. 25; Luke xii. 58.) Et adversarium dicunt unum ex angelis, qui sunt in mundo, quem diabolus vocant, dicentes factum eum ad id, ut ducat eas, quae perierunt, animas a mundo ad principem: (et hunc dicunt esse primum ex mundi fabricatoribus) et illum alterum angelo, qui ministrat ei, tradere tales animas, uti in alia corpora includat: corpus enim dicunt esse carcerem. Et id quod ait: Non exies inde, quoadusque novissimum quadrantem reddas, interpretantur, quasi non exeat quis a potestate angelorum eorum, qui mundum fabricaverunt; sic transcorporatum semper, quoadusque in omni omnino operatione, quae in mundo est, fiat: et quum nil defuerit ei, tum liberatam ejus animam eliberari ad illum Deum, qui est supra angelos mundi fabricatores. Sic quoque salvari et omnes animas, sive ipsae praeoccupantes in uno adventu in omnibus misceantur operationibus, sive de corpore in corpus transmigrantes, vel immissae in unaquaque specie vitae adimplentes, et reddentes debita liberari, uti jam non faciant in corpore. <sup>2</sup> This seems to mean that the followers of Cerinthus and Carpocrates used the Gospel of Matthew without cutting off the genealogies, while the Ebionites cut off the genealogies altogether.

<sup>1</sup> Valentinus was a contemporary of Justin Martyr, and was in Rome during the Episcopate of Hyginus, Pius, and Anicetus (Iren. B. III. 4. 3). According to Clement of Alexandria he claimed Theodas, a disciple of Paul, as his teacher. The date A.D. 140-160 represents the close of his life. He accepted the whole New Testament, but perverted it by fanciful interpretations. He developed the theory of emanations with great completeness. His central thought was that God, in realising His own Being, created the universe. He who dwelt in the eternal silence needed some object to love,—needed creation to which His attributes might flow out. The Beings thus made produced others, and, in the course of evolution, the existence of the material world and the Christian redemption came about. His 30 Aeons made the Pleroma. He tried to find support in Scripture for his speculations, but, as Hippolytus says, he was a Pythagorean first and a Christian afterwards. His eclecticism drew from Persian, Egyptian, Jewish, and (it would appear) Indian thought. By putting in many stages between God and evil, he fancied he had accounted for the origin of evil and the origin of matter. The result was a system of philosophy in which salvation consists of education; in which free-will (the cardinal fact of human consciousness) finds no rightful place; and in which no Aeon bears the name of Repentance. But it appealed, not without success, to the mass of mankind, while Basilides spoke for the learned.

Ibid. B. I. 8. 1. (The Valentinians claimed also to have traditional doctrine.) Τοιαύτης δὲ τῆς ἐποθέσεως αὐτῶν οὔσης, ἦν οὔτε προφηταί ἐκίριζαν, οὔτε ὁ Κύριος ἐδίδαξεν, οὔτε ἀπόστολοι παρέδωκαν, ἦν περὶ τῶν ὅλων ἀρχοῦσι πλεῖον τῶν ἄλλων ἐγνωσμένοι, ἐξ ἀρχαίων ἀναγινώσκοντες, καὶ τὸ δὴ λεγόμενον, ἐξ ἁμμου σχοιρία πλέκειν ἐπιτιθεύοντες, ἀξιόπιστα προσαρμόζειν πειρῶνται τοῖς εἰρημένοις, ἵτοι παραβολὰς κρυφαίας, ἣ ῥήσεις προφητικὰς, ἣ λόγους ἀποστολικούς, ἵνα τὸ πλάσμα αὐτῶν μὴ ἀμάρτυρον εἶναι δοκῇ.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> It is clear from this that the Valentinians accepted the Scriptures, but alleged that through tradition they had attained to a truth which enabled them rightly to interpret Scripture. Irenaeus says the same thing even more explicitly in B. III. 2. 1, where he quotes the Valentinians as saying that without their tradition truth is not attainable. They also objected (B. III. 2. 2) to the orthodox tradition preserved in the Churches. Evenit itaque, neque Scripturis jam neque traditioni consentire eos. But this does not mean (Sup. Rel. II. 76, complete edition) that they "rejected the writings of the N. T. as authoritative documents." They made both Scripture and ordinary Church doctrine bend to their speculations.

EXAMPLES OF VALENTINIAN QUOTATION OR INTERPRETATION.

<sup>6</sup> We give this as a specimen of the interpretations by which the Valentinians tortured the most unlikely passages of Scripture to support their speculations. The boundary or fence of the Pleroma was called Stauros or Horos, in order that they might explain such passages as 1 Cor. i. 18; Gal. vi. 14. (See passage below.) In the present case the use of the two names is defended because of the twofold function of confirmation and division.

Θεόν, καὶ Θεὸς ἦν ὁ Λόγος· οὗτος ἦν ἐν ἀρχῇ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. Πρῶτον διαστείλας τὰ τρία, Θεόν, καὶ Ἀρχὴν, καὶ Λόγον, πάλιν αὐτὰ ἐνοῖ, ἵνα καὶ τὴν προβολὴν ἐστέρων αὐτῶν δεῖξῃ, τοῦ τε Υἱοῦ καὶ τοῦ Λόγου, καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἄμα, καὶ τὴν πρὸς Πατέρα ἔωσιν. . . . <sup>9</sup> See echoes VI. 35 (Rom. xvi. 25; Eph. iii. 9); VI. 30 (Heb. xii. 22); VI. 29 (1 John iv. 8).

<sup>10</sup> This passage is clearly from St Luke, though it is not verbatim, υἱὸς Θεοῦ being omitted. The words ἐκ σοῦ are not genuine, but they are a very old and respectably supported addition for which the Peshito and a, c, e, m of O. L. can be cited. See Sanday's able argument using this as a proof of the antiquity of the Gospel, inasmuch as it had time to be corrupted before this Gnostic cited it. On this passage the Valentinians were divided, Ptolemaeus and Heracleon, as leading the Italian branch, declaring that the body of Jesus was ψυχικόν, while Axionicus and Bardesanes, as representing the Eastern branch, said it was πνευματικόν. The question however arises, whether Hippolytus in his text is quoting the founder of the school, or some follower. It is impossible to say with perfect certainty, but, unless Valentinus was a myth, he must have been the leader of the Valentinians, and it is unreasonable to ask us to believe that he had none of those quotations which his followers founded so much upon. The same question arises here as upon Basilides, and the φησὶ of Hippolytus is ambiguous in both cases. Canon Westcott in his fourth edition withdraws further than is necessary from his former position, maintaining that the citations are by Valentinus himself. The way in which Hippolytus first quotes this passage from the representative of the school and afterwards refers to the disputes between the two branches, makes us think that he is quoting the founder—the disputes being of later date. He resumes in c. 36 with ἐπιλέγει. But even if this be not admitted, the citation is at all events by an early Valentinian—long before Hippolytus, and not later than Irenaeus, whose contemporary Heracleon was. The quotation is not later than 150-180 A.D.—and the text must be much earlier.

<sup>11</sup> In regard to the citations of John's Gospel there is of course the already noticed ambiguity of φησὶ. Was the writer Valentinus or a follower? Baur and others say that the Fourth Gospel adopted its phrases from Valentinus; but when Hippol. IV. 51 compares the Hebdomad of Simon, — νοῦς, ἐπίνοια, ὄνομα, φωνή, λογισμός, ἐνδύμησις, ὁ ἐστώς στάς στησόμενος, — with Valentinus's νοῦς, ἀλήθεια, λόγος, ζωή, ἄνθρωπος, ἐκκλησία, ὁ πατήρ, he leads the reader to accept his statement that the whole school of Valentinus used and founded upon the Fourth Gospel from which its fundamental terms were drawn. Heracleon's Commentary would not have needed to twist John's Gospel if one of the school had written it. The simple use of the terms by the Evangelist must be the original; the distortion by the philosophers is a subsequent stage. See Iren. I. 8, I. 9, I. 10.

<sup>1</sup> Heracleon. There is no doubt about Heracleon having quoted the Gospels of Luke and John and 2 Timothy as seen in our text. He quoted also Matthew, Romans, and 1 Corinthians (see Westcott, Canon). Origen quotes his commentary on John more than 50 times; commenting indeed in many passages quite as much on Heracleon as on John. We have quoted the principal references to his date and position, and a few passages to illustrate his mode of teaching. His minute care of the letter of Scripture is visible in these passages. He was, so far as is known, the first commentator on the New Testament. He wrote a commentary on John, and we have at least a fragmentary comment of his upon Luke. His date is therefore of importance. See note 1 on Ptolemaeus (below p. 422). He quoted the book called 'Peter's Preaching,' and Origen refers to this quotation when discussing the character of true worship as declared in John iv. 22. (Origen, Comment. in Joann. t. 13. p. 226. Migne, Vol. IV. p. 424.) The passage itself is found and discussed in Clem. Strom. VI. 5. 39-43. p. 759.

<sup>4</sup> Epiphanius makes Marcus “succeed Secundus and Epiphanes and Ptolemaeus and Valentinus” (Haer. 34), and Colarbasus (Haer. 35) succeed Marcus, whose “fellow-disciple he was” (Analysis of Tom. 3). He next makes Heracleon succeed Colarbasus, as in our text. But he is confused and inaccurate. It appears that he and others mistook a (probably corrupt) passage of Irenaeus, and changed the Tetrad which began the Pleroma of Marcus, (the Hebrew name of which was Col-Arba, the Voice of Four) into the name of a heretic, Colarbasus, round whose mythical name gradually grew a collection of strange doctrines he was supposed to have taught! See Hort’s article “Colarbasus” in Smith’s Dict. of Christian Biography for a good account. In Haer. 41 Epiphanius makes Heracleon precede Cerdo, who flourished about A.D. 140.

Ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐν φωνῇ ὁμολογία καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν γίνεται, ἢ μόνῃ, ἢ πλείονι, ὁμολογίαν ἔχουσαν εἶναι οἱ πολλοὶ οὐχ ἔγνωσαν, διεναικταὶ δὲ ταύτην τὴν ὁμολογίαν καὶ οἱ ὑποκριταὶ ὁμολογεῖν. Ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐρεθίζεται οὗτος ὁ λόγος καθολικῶς ἐπιεικὴς· οὐ γὰρ πάντες οἱ σωζόμενοι ὁμολογῶσιν τὴν διὰ τῆς φωνῆς ὁμολογίαν καὶ ἐξῆλθον, ἐξ ὧν Ματθαῖος, Φίλιππος, Θωμᾶς, Λευὶς καὶ ἄλλοι πολλοί. Καί ἐστιν ἡ διὰ τῆς φωνῆς ὁμολογία οὐ καθολικὴ ἀλλὰ μερικὴ· καθολικὴ δὲ ἢν τὴν λέγει τὴν ἐν ἔργοις καὶ πράξεσι καταλλήλοις τῆς εἰς αὐτὸν πίστεως. Ἐπειτα δὲ ταύτῃ τῇ ὁμολογίᾳ καὶ ἡ μερικὴ ἢ ἐπὶ τῶν ἐξουσιῶν, ἢ ἀν δέη καὶ ὁ λόγος αἴρη· ὁμολογῆσαι γὰρ οὗτος καὶ τῇ φωνῇ ὁρθῶς προσμολογήσας πρότερον τῇ διαθήσει. Καὶ καλῶς ἐπὶ μὲν τῶν ὁμολογούντων, “ἐν ἐμοὶ” εἶπεν· ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν ἀρνούμενων τὸ “ἐμὲ” προσέθηκεν. Οὗτοι γὰρ καὶ τῇ φωνῇ ὁμολογήσωσιν αὐτὸν, ἀρνοῦνται αὐτὸν τῇ πράξει μὴ ὁμολογοῦντες, μόνοι δ' ἐν αὐτῷ ὁμολογοῦσιν οἱ ἐν τῇ κατ' αὐτὸν ὁμολογίᾳ καὶ πράξει βιοῦντες, ἐν οἷς καὶ αὐτοὺς ὁμολογεῖ ἐντελεικόμενος αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐχόμενος ἐπὶ τοιούτων, διόπερ “ἀρνήσασθαι ἐαυτὸν οὐδέποτε δύναται.” (2 Tim. ii. 13.) Ἀρνοῦνται δὲ αὐτὸν οἱ μὴ ὄντες ἐν αὐτῷ· οὐ γὰρ εἶπεν, “ὅς ἀρνήσῃται ἐν ἐμοὶ,” ἀλλ' “ἐμὲ.” οὐδεὶς γὰρ ποτε ὢν ἐν αὐτῷ ἀρνεῖται αὐτόν. Τὸ δὲ “ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων” καὶ τῶν σωζομένων καὶ τῶν ἐθνικῶν δὲ ὁμοίως παρ' οἷς μὲν καὶ τῇ πολιτείᾳ, παρ' οἷς δὲ καὶ τῇ φωνῇ. ## 9. PTOLEMAEUS.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> There is not much difficulty in regard to the use made by Ptolemaeus of the New Testament. There is no good reason to doubt the genuineness of his ‘Letter to Flora,’ in which are references to Matthew, Mark, John, Romans, Corinthians and Ephesians. In Irenaeus we find that he also referred to Galatians and Colossians. The difficulty in estimating his testimony arises from doubt as to his date. Irenaeus in Books I. II. of his great work mentions Ptolemaeus often, and once he names Heracleon along with him. Irenaeus wrote those books not later than A.D. 182. The author of ‘Supernatural Religion’ finds in Epiphanius and in the ‘Chronicon Paschale’ grounds for believing that Theodotion’s translation of the O. T. (which Irenaeus quotes in Book III.) was not published till A.D. 184. But we have to do with Books I. and II. and need not discuss the value of the argument drawn from such sources. Irenaeus seems to have personally known some of the leading Valentinians in Rome A.D. 178 (see his Preface to Ref. Haer. § 2), and, as Ptolemaeus and Heracleon were of the “Italian” school (see Hippolytus in our text), it is probable that he met Ptolemaeus, who had founded a school before the time Irenaeus was in Rome. So much for Irenaeus. But we find from Clement and Origen that Heracleon was in some special way the pupil of Valentinus, and the most distinguished of his school. If so, he must have been the contemporary of his master during part at least of his life. The activity of Valentinus (A.D. 140-160) is therefore at the latest time when Heracleon probably avowed his attachment to John’s Gospel, on which he afterwards wrote a commentary. Any other supposition destroys all idea of the continuity of the school of Valentinus. But that continuity is one of the best attested facts in the early history of Christianity. We may conclude therefore that by the middle of the second century this school agreed with the orthodox Christians in accepting the Gospels.

<sup>1</sup> Marcus. Concerning the views of Marcus and the Marcians, a section of the Valentinians, see Irenaeus, B. I. 13-21; Hippol. VI. 39-54; Pseudo-Tert. c. 5. p. 761 (Oehler); Philastrius Haer. 42; Epiph. Haer. 34, &c. Marcus professed (says Irenaeus) to improve upon his Master; and he had more intricate and more fanciful speculations. He dwelt much on the power of letters and of numbers. In his system was a Tetrad; and in the original text of Irenaeus (B. I. 14. 1) (or in the authority from which he quoted) the phrase קולבס (Col-Arba, voice of the four) occurred. This was amplified into "Colarbasus;" Hippolytus so names some one, and Epiphanius ingeniously made an account of his heresy. This he did by extracting from Irenaeus (B. I. 12. 3) what is said of quidam prudentiores, who are mentioned after Ptolemaeus. See Lipsius, Zur Quellen-Kritik des Epiphanius, p. 166. See also Dr Hort's account of the (not quite cleared up) puzzle in Smith's Dict. of Christian Biography, Art. "Colarbasus." It is scarcely necessary to show Marcus's references to the New Testament, or his perversions of John's Gospel.

<sup>1</sup> Docetae. Though what is called Docetism was an ordinary tenet of Gnosticism, there seems to have been in the second century a special sect bearing the name of Docetae. They believed that our Lord inhabited a human body; but that under it he had another and more spiritual frame which he retained when he left the earthly form nailed to the cross. Uncertainty as to the date of this sect makes it useless to dwell upon their quotations. Clem. Alex. Strom. III. 13 says they were founded by Julius Cassianus, a pupil of Valentinus. Serapion (Eus. II. E. VI. 12) says that they used a book called the Gospel of Peter. This was in A.D. 190. References to Colossians ii. 11, 14, 15, and to 2 Cor. v. 3 may be found in Hippol. Ref. Haer. VIII. 10. Reference may be here made to other information supplied by Hippolytus.

VIII. 13). He is mentioned by Theodoret, Fab. I. 18. Saturnilus (in Irenaeus, B. I. 24. 1 called Saturninus) was

Theodoti Epitomae (Dindorf's Ed. of Clem. Alex. Vol. III. p. 424, &c.), c. 6. (John's Gospel used by the Valentinians.) Τὸ of Antioch in Syria, and taught the usual doctrine regarding the evil of matter, the sin of marriage, and the mission of Christ to deliver men from the God of the Jews. Hippolytus repeats Irenaeus's account of him almost verbatim.

<sup>1</sup> Theodotus. In explanation of our extracts from "Theodotus" it is necessary to prefix some notes. There were several of this name. The chief of them seems to have been a native of Byzantium, a tanner, who was excommunicated by Victor of Rome. Another, a banker, is said by Eusebius, H. E. V. 28, to have been a follower of his namesake. Hippol. Ref. Haer. VII. 35, 36, mentions both. Epiphanius, Haer. 54 (B. I. t. 2), speaks of Theodotus the tanner as the founder of a sect—the Theodotians. He speaks of this sect as a successor of the sect of the Alogi who denied John's Gospel. The story is that Theodotus—in some undefined persecution—denied Christ, and afterwards (in Rome to which he had fled) alleged that he had not denied God but Christ, a man. His arguments accordingly went to prove the mere humanity of Jesus Christ, and to cover the denial of his supernatural birth. But it is quite clear that this description, though it may be reconciled with Eusebius, does not apply to the person named by Hippolytus, who taught that Jesus was born of a virgin, and that Christ came from heaven, like a dove, upon him at his baptism. The views recorded in Hippolytus resemble those of Cerinthus. To which of those men do the extracts appended to the works of Clem. Alex. belong? Their title is Ἐκ τῶν Θεοδότου καὶ τῆς ἀνατολικῆς καλουμένης διδασκαλίας κατὰ τοὺς Οὐαλεντίνου χρόνους ἐπιτομαί. For χρόνους it has been suggested to read αἰῶνας. The extracts seem to have been made by Clement for his own use, and entered in a commonplace book. When they are studied they seem to be the work of a Valentinian; and, therefore, apparently of a Theodotus different from those named before. The date of his writing is uncertain; but as being between the times of Valentinus and Clement, it may be put down for the beginning of the last quarter of the second century. We have given extracts showing the very numerous quotations of Scripture to be found in the passages preserved (apparently by Clement). And following them we have given some extracts from Epiphanius, showing the passages of Scripture on which (according to him) Theodotus the tanner relied. It seems hopeless to try to reconcile the statements of Hippolytus, Eusebius, and Epiphanius, &c., regarding the form of Cerinthianism or Ebionism professed by this Theodotus. Lipsius (p. 236) throws Hippolytus (“Pseudo-Origen”) overboard, and inserts a negative in the text of Pseudo-Tertullian, in order to make the accounts agree. But this is a strong measure. Cave (Hist. Lit. p. 54) tries to blend the authorities in his time, but only makes a mosaic which is independent of them all. The second Theodotus (the banker) is said to have founded the sect of Melchizedekians, declaring that Christ was inferior to Melchizedek (see Hippol. Ref. Haer. VII. 36; Pseudo-Tert. c. 38). That sect, of course, founded on Hebrews v. 6; vi. 20; vii. 17. For a suggestion of difficulties about Theodotus, without clearing them up, see Dindorf’s Clem. Alex. IV. p. 462. The passages given in our text are only specimens; but they contain references to the Gospels, Pauline Epistles (Rom., Cor., Gal., Eph., Phil., Col., 1 Tim.), and 1 Peter. The passages in Epiphanius refer to Mat., Luke, John, Acts, 1 Tim.

“ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ λόγος, καὶ ὁ λόγος ἦν πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, καὶ Θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος,” οἱ ἀπὸ Οὐαλεντίνου οὕτως ἐκδέχονται. Ἀρχὴν μὲν γὰρ τὸν μονογενῆ λέγουσιν, κ.τ.λ.

THE GOSPELS QUOTED.

Ibid. c. 9. Ἡ πίστις οὐ μία, ἀλλὰ διάφορος. Ὁ γοῦν Σωτήρ ηἰσι· “Γενήθιτω σοι κατὰ τὴν πίστιν.” (Mat. ix. 29) ὅθεν εἰρηγία τοὺς μὲν τῆς κλήσεως ἀνθρώπους κατὰ τὴν παρουσίαν τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου πληρηθίσεσθαι· ἀδίκατον δὲ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς· διό ηἰσι· “καὶ εἰ δυνατὸν, τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς μου.” (Mat. xxiv. 24.) Πάλιν ὅταν λέγῃ, “ἐξέλθετε ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ Πατρὸς μου” (John ii. 16), τοῖς κλητοῖς λέγει· πάλιν τῷ ἐξ ἀποδημίας ἐλθόντι καὶ κατεδιδοσκόπι τὰ ἐπάρχοντα, ᾧ τὸν σιτειτὸν ἔθυσεν μόσχον (Luke xv. 23), τὴν κλῆσιν λέγει, καὶ ὅπου ὁ βασιλεὺς εἰς τὸ δεῖπνον τοῦ γάμου τοὺς ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς κέκληκεν (Mat. xxii. 9). Πᾶντες μὲν οὖν κέκληνται ἐν ἴσιν· βρέχει γὰρ ἐπὶ δικαίους καὶ ἀδίκους, καὶ τὸν ἥλιον ἐπιλάμπει πᾶσιν· (Mat. v. 45) ἐκλέγονται δὲ οἱ μᾶλλον πιστεύσαντες, πρὸς οὓς λέγει “τὸν Πατέρα μου οὐδεὶς ἑώρακεν εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱός.” (John i. 18) καὶ “ὑμεῖς ἐστε τὸ φῶς τοῦ κόσμου.” (Mat. v. 14) καὶ “Πάτερ ἅγιε, ἁγίασον ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου.” (John xvii. 11.)

(de Praeser. Haer. c. 30) says that for incontinence he incurred Marcion's displeasure, and left Rome for Alexandria. The story is doubtful. In his old age he was a man of high character at Rome (τὴν πολιτείαν σεμνυνόμενος καὶ τὸ γῆρας) when Rhodon opposed him (Eus. H. E. V. 13). This being in the reign of Commodus (A.D. 192), Apelles must have been in his manhood when Marcion was in Rome. Jerome's statement that he was the author of a Gospel may be explained by his reverence for the "Revelations of Philumene" (Φανερώσεις Φιλουμένης), a prophetess and prestidigitator who accompanied him. It is said (Tert. l. c.) that Apelles himself wrote them down as he learned them from her. He denied Christ's birth of a virgin. He taught that good works are indispensable to saving faith in Christ crucified (Eus. l. c.). See some of Tertullian's references to Apelles at pp. 46, 48. His relation to the canonical Scriptures is obscure. He probably accepted our Gospels, but denied their exclusive authority; and believed in the continued inspiration of men and women by the Holy Spirit. But he was only a heretic in a mild sense; his heresy being that he believed the Maker of the world to have made it to the glory of the supreme God who is Lord and self-existent, and that the supreme God sent Christ in the fulness of time to amend the world. Hippolytus (l. c.) affirms that he held by a succession of four Gods. But Epiphanius, Haer. 44 (quoted in our text), confirms Origen. See a very full account of Apelles in Lardner, IV. p. 639.

In earlier usage all Christians were called Nazarenes by their Jewish neighbours; all Jewish Christians were called Ebionites in the Christian Church. <sup>2</sup> Did Symmachus oppose Matthew's Gospel in order to confirm the Ebionite position; or did he use it for that purpose? What means ἀποτεινόμενος? Jerome says that Symmachus wrote a Commentary on Matthew's Gospel; how then could he oppose it? May it not be that, in so far as the genuine St Matthew came short of the Ebionite doctrines, this Partisan-Commentator opposed it, and thereby established to his own satisfaction the worth of the passages peculiar to the Ebionite form of the book?

<sup>1</sup> Montanus proclaimed at Pepuza in Phrygia (about A.D. 150, Gieseler) that the power of the Paraclete in the Church was to be perfected in his time. His seems to have been the longing for the perfection of the Church of Christ which from his day to Edward Irving's has influenced so many men of the highest earnestness. It was not to be expected that in Phrygia any form of religious enthusiasm would be kept within bounds. And accordingly Montanus and two prophetesses, Maximilla and Priscilla, claimed to have received special revelations. They adhered to the Christian creed, and to the Christian Canon (see Hippol. in our text), but in their zeal added new strictness to various practical observances. They “prescribed new and rigorous fasts, forbade second marriage, ascribed extraordinary value to celibacy and martyrdom, manifested profound contempt for everything earthly, and taught that incontinence, murder, and idolatry, though they did not exclude from the grace of God, shut a person for ever out of the Church.” Gieseler, C. H., Vol. I. p. 148 (Eng. Trans.). They also proclaimed the speedy end of the world. They founded largely on the promises of the Paraclete in John's Gospel, and for their strict discipline appealed to Heb. vi. 4. In his later days Tertullian was a Montanist. In the Pseudo-Tert., Adv. Haer. c. 7, is an account of them: “Secundum Phrygas.”

Certe eos qui illuminati sunt, et gustaverunt donum coeleste, et participes facti sunt Spiritus Sancti, gustaveruntque bonum Dei verbum, negare non possumus baptizatos. Si autem baptizati peccare non possunt, quomodo nunc Apostolus dicit, et prolapsi sunt? Verum

ne Montanus, et Novatus hic rideant, qui contendunt non posse renovari per poenitentiam eos qui crucifixerunt sibimet Filium Dei, et ostentui habuerunt, consequenter hunc errorem solvit, et ait: Confidimus autem de vobis dilectissimi meliora et viciniore salutis, tametsi ita loquimur. Non enim injustus est Deus, ut obliviscatur operis vestri et dilectionis, quam ostendistis in nomine ipsius, qui ministratis Sanctis, et nunc ministratis. (Heb. vi. 9, 10.)

<sup>1</sup> Alogi. There is no mention of the Alogi by name in any author save Epiphanius. His contemporary Philastrius is the only author who gives a description that can be applied to the same sect. This has led to grave doubts of there being any such sect. Lardner gives an absolute denial of their existence. Volkmar, in a work I have not seen, "Hippolyt und seine Zeitgenossen," seems to take up the same position. See Lipsius, Zur Quellen-Kritik des Epiphanius, p. 23. There are some considerations; however, on the other side. Philastrius does not name the sect, though he describes it, and this may indicate that he and Epiphanius drew their information from the same source, so that Epiphanius is original only in giving the name. The vague expressions of Irenaeus and of Dionysius in Eusebius may be made to apply to the Alogi. On the whole, and without going into details, it seems probable that there were some objectors to the Johannine writings, as a recoil from the extravagances of Montanism (e.g. Caius, see p. 343 and note), and that Epiphanius more suo consolidated those scattered utterances into the manifesto of a sect. Some of those mentioned by Epiphanius seem to have lived in or near Thyatira.

καρῶν αὐτῶν, μὴ ἐννοούμενον καὶ λέγοντα ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ· χρονίζει ὁ κύριός μου ἐλθεῖν· καὶ ἄρξεται τύπτειν τοὺς συνδούλους αὐτοῦ, ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων μετὰ τῶν πόρων καὶ μεθυσμάτων· καὶ ἵξει ὁ κύριος τοῦ δούλου ἐκείνου ἐν ὄρα ἢ οὐ προσδοξῶ, καὶ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἢ οὐ γνώσκει, καὶ διχοτομήσει αὐτὸν, καὶ τὸ ἀπιστούν αὐτοῦ μέρος μετὰ τῶν ὑποκριτῶν θήσει. (Mat. xxiv. 45, &c.; Luke xii. 42, &c.)

Ibid. c. 49. (Peter and Simon agree to regard Jesus as predicted in Scripture.) Καὶ ὁ Πέτρος ἔφη· ἀντίπα ἐγώ. Γέγραπται ἐν τῇ προφητῇ τοῦ νόμου βιβλίου πρὸς τοὺς τελευταίους· “οὐκ ἐκλείψει ἄρχων ἐξ Ἰουδα, οὐδὲ ἡγούμενος ἐκ τῶν μικρῶν αὐτοῦ, ἕως ἂν ἐλθῇ οὗ ἔστιν· καὶ αὐτὸς προσδοξία ἐθνῶν.” (Gen. xlix. 10.) Ἐάν τις οὖν τὸν μετὰ τὸ ἐξ Ἰουδα ἐκλείψαι ἄρχοντα καὶ ἡγούμενον, ἐληλυθότα, καὶ ἐπὶ ἐθνῶν προσδοξᾶσθαι μέλλοντα, νοήσῃσιν δινηθῇ, οὕτως τὴν περιουσίαν ἐκ τῶν ἀποτελεσθέντων ἀληθῆ τὸν ἐληλυθότα ἐπιγνῶν· οὗ τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ λειθόμενος γνώσκειται τίνα ἐστὶν τῶν γραφῶν τὰ ἀληθῆ, τίνα δὲ τὰ ψευδῆ. Καὶ ὁ Σίμων· συνήμι οὕτω τὸν Ἰησοῦν ὑμῶν λέγεις, ὥς αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τῆς γραφῆς προφητευσθέντα. Δεδόσθω τοιγαροῦν οὕτως ἔχειν. Λέγε τοίνυν πῶς ὑμᾶς διακρίνειν τὰς γραφὰς ἐδίδαξεν;

Ibid. c. 50. (Be careful in selecting Scripture.) Καὶ ὁ Πέτρος· οὕτω μέμνηται τὰ ἀληθῆ τοῖς ψεύδεσιν, μέμνημαί σου αὐτὸν ἀπεικονίζοντα τοῖς Σαδδουκαίοις εἰπεῖν· “διὰ τοῦτο πλατῶσθε, μὴ εἰδότες τὰ ἀληθῆ τῶν γραφῶν, οὗ εἵνεκεν ἀγνοεῖτε τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.” (Mark xii. 24.) Εἰ δὲ τὰ ἀληθῆ τῶν γραφῶν ἀγνοεῖν αὐτοὺς ἐπέβαλεν, δῆλον ὡς ὄντων ψευδῶν. Ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῇ γένει· “Γίνεσθε τραπεζίται δόκιμοι,” ὡς δοκίμων καὶ κυβδήλων λόγων ὄντων· καὶ τῷ εἰπεῖν· “διὰ τί οὐ νοεῖτε τὸ εὐλογεῖν τῶν γραφῶν;” Βεβαιότερον τοῦ ἀδιαρέτως ἐγρωμοροῦντος τίθησιν τὸν νοῦν.

Ibid. c. 53. (Prophecy and the Heavenly voice.) Ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ οὐρανῶν μέγας φωνὴ ἤκοίσαθι λέγονσα· “Οὗτος ἐστὶν μου ὁ υἱὸς ὁ ἀγαπητός εἰς ὃν εὐδόκησα, τούτου ἀκούετε,” (Mat. iii. 17; Luke ix. 35), καὶ πρὸς τοῦτοις ἐπὶ πλεον αὐτοῖς πεπλανημένους ἐλέγξει θέλων τοὺς προφήτας, παρ’ ὧν δὴ μεμαθηγέται ἐβεβαίουν, ἐπιθυμοῦντας ἀληθείας καὶ μὴ μεμαθηγότητος τελευτήσαντας ἀμαρτάνειν εἰπὼν· “Πολλοὶ προφητῆται καὶ βασιλεῖς ἐπεθύμησαν ἰδεῖν, ἃ ὑμεῖς βλέπετε, καὶ ἀκοῦσαι, ἃ ὑμεῖς ἀκούετε, καὶ ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, οὔτε εἶδον, οὔτε ἤκουσαν,” (Mat. xiii. 17; Luke x. 24), ἔτι μὲν ἔλεγεν· Ἐγὼ εἰμι, περὶ οὗ Μωϋσῆς προεφήτευσεν, εἰπὼν, προφήτην ἐγερεῖ ὑμῖν Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν, ἐκ τῶν ἀδελφῶν ὑμῶν, ὅσπερ καὶ ἐμέ, αὐτοῦ ἀκούετε κατὰ πάντα. Ὅς ἂν δὲ μὴ ἀκούσῃ τοῦ προφήτου ἐκείνου, ἀποθάνειται. (John v. 46; Deut. xviii. 15; Acts iii. 22.)

πονηροῦ ἐστίν.” (Mat. v. 37.) Καὶ τοῖς λέγουσιν, ὅτι Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακώβ ἀπέθανον, ἔφη· “Οὐκ ἔστιν Θεὸς νεκρῶν, ἀλλὰ ζώντων.” (Mat. xxii. 32.) Τοῖς δὲ οἰομένοις, ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς πειράζει, ὥς αἱ γραφαὶ λέγουσιν, ἔφη· “Ὁ πονηρὸς ἐστίν ὁ πειράζων,<sup>2</sup> ὁ καὶ αὐτὸν πειράσας.” Τοῖς δὲ ὑπολαμβάνουσιν ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς οὐ προγινώσκει ἔφη· “Ὅτι δὲν γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος ὅτι ζητῆτε τούτων ἀπάντων, πρὶν αὐτὸν ἀξιόσητε.” (Mat. iv. 3; vi. 8, 32.) Τοῖς δὲ πιστεύουσιν, ὥς αἱ γραφαὶ λέγουσιν, ὅτι μὴ πάντα βλέπει, “Ὁ πατὴρ κρυπτῶ εὐχέσθαι” εἰπὼν, “Καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ βλέπων τὰ κρυπτὰ ἀποδώσει ὑμῖν.” (Mat. vi. 6.)

Ibid. c. 56. (The Heavenly Father.) Τοῖς δὲ οἰομένοις αὐτὸν μὴ ἀγαθὸν εἶναι, ὥς αἱ γραφαὶ λέγουσιν, ἔφη· “Τίνα ὑμῶν αἰτήσῃ υἱὸς ἄρτον, μὴ λίθον ἐπιδώσει αὐτῷ; ἢ καὶ ἰχθὺν αἰτήσῃ, μὴ ὄφιν ἐπιδώσει αὐτῷ; εἰ οὖν ὑμεῖς, πονηροὶ ὄντες, οἴδατε δόματα ἀγαθὰ διδόναι τοῖς τέκνοις ὑμῶν, πόσῳ μᾶλλον ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ οὐράνιος δώσει ἀγαθὰ τοῖς αἰτουμένοις αὐτὸν, καὶ τοῖς ποιοῦσιν τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ;” (Luke xi. 11; Mat. vii. 9.) Τοῖς δὲ αὐτὸν διαβεβαιουμένοις ἐν ταῷ εἶναι, ἔφη· “Μὴ ὁμολήσητε τὸν οὐρανὸν, ὅτι Θεὸς Θεοῦ ἐστίν, μήτε τὴν γῆν, ὅτι ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ ἐστίν.” (Mat. v. 35.) Τοῖς δὲ προλαβοῦσιν ὅτι θυσιῶν ὀρέγεται ὁ Θεὸς ἔφη· “Ὁ Θεὸς ἔλεος θέλει καὶ οὐ θυσίας, ἐπίγνωσιν αὐτοῦ καὶ οὐχ ὀλοκαυτώματα.” (Mat. ix. 13; xii. 7.)

<sup>1</sup> Tertullian (Adv. Marc. V. 1. Scorp. c. 13) has references to a portion of this book, Test. Benj. c. 11. Origen also (Hom. in Joshua XV. c. 6) refers to it by name with a certain measure of respect, although declaring that it is not in the Canon. It professes to be the legacy of good counsels left by each of the Sons of Jacob to his children. It is the work of a Jewish Christian favourable to St Paul, who dwells upon the Patriarchal rather than the Mosaic period of Jewish History. It has been supposed by some (following Grabe) that the work was written by a Jew before the Christian era, and afterwards interpolated so as to contain Pauline Christian theology. In favour of this view it may be urged that the writing is not always consistent with itself, but we must urge on the other hand that, even allowing due weight to this, it seems rather to show a Jewish author proud of his ancestry and yet devoted to his Christian faith than to require us to regard all the Christian passages as interpolations in a Jewish original. See Sinker's "Testamenta XII Patriarcharum" for copious discussions. Some (Anger) make the date soon after the middle of the second century; but there is much reason to put it earlier, even at the beginning of the century, inasmuch as the author seems to write before Judaism was so hopelessly overthrown as it was before the middle of the second century. The principal references to the N. T., in addition to those in our text, seem to be Jud. 20, τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας (John xv. 26); Levi 3, ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας λογικῆς (Rom. xii. 1); Dan 5, τὸν Θεὸν τῆς εἰρήνης (John xv. 33); Zab. 9, Θεὸν ἐν σχήματι ἀνθρώπου; Benj. 10, τὸν βασιλέα τῶν οὐρανῶν, τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς φανέντα μορφῇ ἀνθρώπου ταπεινώσεως (Phil. ii. 6-8); Benj. 3, ἐν σῶματι διαζήκης (Heb. xiii. 20); Is. 7, ἀμαρτίαν εἰς θάνατον (1 John v. 16); Levi 18, δώσει τοῖς ἁγίοις φαγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς (Rev. ii. 7); Dan 5, τῆς νέας Ἱερουσαλὴμ (Rev. xxi. 2).

1. IGNATIUS.

2. HEGESIPPUS.<sup>1</sup>

Eus. H. E. II. 23; III. 20. See before, p. 127. (Hegesippus had some other authority than G. H.)

Ibid. IV. 22. See before, p. 128 and Note 6. (Hegesippus quoted from G. H. and from (or, which is in?) Syriac.)

<sup>1</sup> This title seems more fitly to describe them than "Heretical Gospels" (which the Nazarene form of the Gospel of the Hebrews cannot be said to be) or "Apocryphal Gospels" (which the Gospel of the Hebrews in any form scarcely was). The "Gospel of James" or the "Gospel of Nicodemus" may be called Apocryphal.

<sup>1</sup> Hegesippus. On Hegesippus see Introduction, and before, p. 128, note 7. See there also a quotation from Photius showing that a quotation by him agrees with our St Mat. xiii. 16. He is the first of whom we read that he used the G. H., but it does not appear that he used it in preference to the Canonical Gospels.

3. PAPIAS.

Eus. II. E. III. 39. See before, p. 57 and Note 7. (Papias' work and G. II. had a narrative about a sinful woman.)<sup>1</sup>

4. IRENAEUS.

B. I. 26. 2. See before, p. 431. (The Ebionites used only Matthew's Gospel.)<sup>1</sup>

5. CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

Ibid. V. 10. p. 684. Οὗ γὰρ φθονῶν, φησὶ, παρίγγειλεν ὁ Κύριος ἐν τινὶ Εὐαγγελίῳ, "Μυστήριον ἐμὸν ἐμοὶ καὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς τοῦ οἴκου μου."<sup>1</sup>

6. ORIGEN.

Comment. in Joann. t. 2. Tom. IV. p. 63. (Migne, Vol. IV. p. 132.) Καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα διὰ τοῦ Λόγου ἐγένετο . . . εἰ καὶ λέξεις τινὲς περισπᾶν ἡμᾶς εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον δοκοῦσιν. Ἐὰν δὲ προσίεται τις τὸ καθ' Ἑβραίους Εὐαγγέλιον, ἔνθα αὐτὸς ὁ Σωτὴρ φησιν· Ἄρτι ἔλαβέ με ἡ μήτηρ μου τὸ Ἅγιον Πνεῦμα, ἐν μιᾷ τῶν τριχῶν μου, καὶ ἀπένεγκέ με εἰς τὸ ὄρος τὸ μέγα Θαβώρ· ἐπαπορήσει πῶς μήτηρ Χριστοῦ τὸ διὰ τοῦ Λό-

<sup>1</sup> Papias. Eusebius does not say that Papias quoted the Gospel of the Hebrews; but he says that the narrative of the woman accused of many sins which Papias recorded was in that Gospel. As said in p. 57 (note 7), it is Eusebius, not Papias, who refers to that Gospel.

<sup>1</sup> Irenaeus. Irenaeus says in general terms that the Ebionites are convicted of wrong views of God, even from that Gospel according to Matthew which alone they use; and again, that they use only Matthew's Gospel, and reject Paul as an apostate from the Law.

7. EUSEBIUS.

Eus. II. E. III. 25. See before, p. 11. (Hebrew Christians use the G. II.)

Ibid. III. 27. See before, p. 432. (Ebionites use G. II. alone.)

Eus. Theoph. IV. 12. The cause therefore of the divisions of soul that came to pass in houses Himself taught, as we have found in a place in the Gospel existing among the Jews in the Hebrew language, in which it is said, &c.<sup>1</sup>

8. JEROME.

Comment. ad Eph. V. 4. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 641.) In Hebraico quoque Evangelio legimus Dominum ad discipulos loquentem: "Et nunquam," inquit, "laeti sitis, nisi cum fratrem vestrum videritis in caritate."

Dei sermonem intellexerit, credideritque Evangelio, quod secundum Hebraeos editum nuper transtulimus (in quo ex persona Salvatoris dicitur: Modo tulit me mater mea, Sanctus Spiritus, in uno capillorum meorum), non dubitabit dicere Sermonem Dei ortum esse de Spiritu, et animam, quae sponsa Sermonis est, habere socrum Sanctum Spiritum, qui apud Hebraeos genere dicitur feminino "RUA." . . . Et ne forte dubites Verbum et Filium nasci de Spiritu Sancto, Gabrielis ad Mariam verba considera: Spiritus Sanctus veniet super te, etc.<sup>1</sup>

Ibid. c. 3. See before, p. 139 and Note 1. (The Hebrew original of Matthew in Cesarea. The Nazarenes in Beroea use it.)

Comment. in Isai. B. XI. c. xl. 11. (A.D. 410). (Vallars. Vol. IV. p. 485.) Sed et in Evangelio quod juxta Hebraeos scriptum Nazaraei lectitant, Dominus loquitur: Modo tulit me mater mea, Spiritus Sanctus. Nemo autem in hac parte scandalizari debet, quod dicatur apud Hebraeos spiritus genere feminino, quum nostra lingua appelletur genere masculino, et Graeco sermone, neutro. In divinitate enim nullus est sexus.

Comment. in Mat. II. 6. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 14.) Bethlehem Judaeae: librariorum hic error est. Putamus enim ab Evangelista primo editum, sicut in ipso Hebraico legimus Judae, non Judaeae. . . .

<sup>1</sup> Jerome. The Elkesaites represented the Holy Spirit as a female principle. (Hippol. Ref. Haer. IX. 13. p. 462, and Epiph. Haer. 19. 4; 53. 1.) It appears as in the Clem. Hom. (III. 20-27) that Christ was regarded as the male principle and the Holy Spirit as the female principle. The Spirit "brooded over the deep," &c. The 'Helena' of Simon, the 'Sophia' of Valentinus, and the 'Philoumena' of Apelles, are names given by Gnostics to a female principle, by no means corresponding, however, to the Holy Spirit as represented in Scripture. The worship of the Virgin Mary in the middle ages may show the result of the same tendency. See Baring Gould's 'Lost and Hostile Gospels,' p. 132.

<sup>2</sup> The quotations of Origen from the G. H. by name are only the two given above. The early portion of his Homilies on Matthew is lost. The Latin translation of what remains begins in c. XIII. But Jerome is not likely to be mistaken in this statement that Origen often used the G. H. His knowledge of the text of that Gospel would enable Jerome to identify some quotations in Origen of which the source is not stated. See list of those quotations in Nicholson, G. H. p. 143.

Ibid. XII. 13. In Evangelio, quo utuntur Nazareni et Ebionitae, quod nuper in Graecum de Hebraeo sermone transtulimus et quod vocatur a plerisque Matthaei authenticum. . . .

Ibid. XXIII. 35. In Evangelio, quo utuntur Nazareni, pro filio Barachiae, . . . (Mat. xxiii. 35.)

Ibid. XXVII. 16. Iste (Barrabas) in Evangelio, quod scribitur juxta Hebraeos, . . .

Comment. in Isai. XI. 2. (Vallars. Vol. IV. p. 156.) Juxta Evangelium, quod Hebraeo sermone conscriptum legunt Nazaraei, "descendit super eum omnis fons (יֵצֵר) Spiritus Sancti." . . .

Comment. in Ezech. XVIII. 7. (A.D. 413). (Vallars. Vol. V. p. 207.) Et in Evangelio quod juxta Hebraeos Nazaraei legere consueverunt, . . .

Adv. Pelag. III. 2. (A.D. 416). (Vallars. Vol. II. p. 768.) In Evangelio juxta Hebraeos quod Chaldaico quidem Syroque sermone sed Hebraicis literis<sup>3</sup> scriptum est, quo utuntur usque hodie Nazareni secundum Apostolos, sive ut plerique autumant juxta Matthaeum . . .

Epist. ad Hedib. (after A.D. 398). (Vallars. Vol. I. p. 825.) In Evangelio, quod Hebraicis literis scriptum est, legimus, . . .

9. THEODORET (A.D. 451-458).

10. NICEPHORUS (A.D. 758-828).

11. EPIPHANIUS.

Ephiph. Haer. I. t. 2. h. 29. p. 124. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 405.)
 Ἔχουσι δὲ (sc. οἱ Ναζαραῖοι) τὸ κατὰ Ματθαῖον Εὐαγγέλιον πληρέστατον Ἑβραϊστί. Παρ' αὐτοῖς γὰρ σαφῶς τοῦτο, καθὼς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐγράφη, Ἑβραϊκοῖς γραμμασιν ἔτι σώζεται. Οὐκ οἶδα δὲ εἰ καὶ τὰς γενεαλογίας τὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ ἔχει Χριστοῦ περιεῖλον.

Ibid. I. t. 2. h. 30. p. 126. See before, p. 139. (Ebionites receive Matthew's Gospel, and call it 'according to the Hebrew's.')

 HEBREWS IN ITS NAZARENE OR ITS EBIONITE

Ephiph. Haer. I. t. 2. h. 30. p. 137. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 426.)

<sup>4</sup> See before, p. 126, note 5, on Justin's reference to the fire and the descent of the Spirit. Justin's correspondence with this form is not verbal. In Jerome's version below the supernatural appearances are referred, as here, to our Lord's coming up from the water. It will be observed that there is no little divergence between Epiphanius and Jerome.

νεαλογίας ἄρχονται τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιεῖσθαι, ὡς προείπομεν, λέγοντες ὅτι “ἐγένετο,” φησὶν, “ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις Ἡρώδου βασιλέως τῆς
ιζῶν βάπτισμα μετανοίας ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ ποταμῷ,” καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς.

Jerome, Comment. in Isai. B. IV. c. xi. 2. (Vallars. Vol. IV. p. 155.) Illud quod in Evangelio Matthaei omnes quaerunt Ecclesiastici, et non inveniunt ubi scriptum sit, Quoniam Nazaraeus vocabitur, eruditi Hebraeorum de hoc loco assumptum putant. . . . Super hunc igitur florem, qui de trunco et de radice Jesse per Mariam virginem repente consurget, requiescet Spiritus Domini, quia in ipso complacuit omnem plenitudinem divinitatis habitare corporaliter: nequaquam per partes, ut in caeteris Sanctis, sed juxta Evangelium eorum, quod Hebraeo sermone conscriptum legunt Nazarei: Descendit super eum omnis fons Spiritus Sancti. . . . Porro in Evangelio, cujus supra fecimus mentionem, haec scripta reperimus: Factum est autem quum ascendisset Dominus de aqua, descendit fons omnis Spiritus Sancti, et requievit super eum, et dixit illi: Fili mi, in omnibus Prophetis expectabam te, ut venires, et requiescerem in te. Tu es enim requies mea, tu es filius meus primogenitus, qui regnas in sempiternum.<sup>6</sup>

Id. Comment. in Ezech. B. VI. c. xviii. (Vallars. Vol. V. p. 207.) Et in Evangelio quod juxta Hebraeos Nazaraei legere consueverunt, inter maxima ponitur crimina, qui fratris<sup>7</sup> sui spiritum contristaverit. (Mat. v. 24; compare xviii. 6, 7.)

p. 641.) Verum et haec a sanctis viris penitus propellenda, quibus magis convenit flere atque lugere, ut in Hebraico quoque Evangelio legimus, Dominum ad discipulos loquentem: Et nunquam, inquit, laeti sitis, nisi quum fratrem vestrum videritis in caritate. (Compare Mat. as in last extract.)

Id. Comment. in Mat. B. I. c. vi. 11. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 34.) In Evangelio quod appellatur secundum Hebraeos, pro substantiali pane, reperi Mahar, quod dicitur crastinum, ut sit sensus: panem nostrum crasticum, id est, futurum da nobis hodie.

Ibid. B. II. c. xii. 13. (Vallars. Vol. VII. p. 77.) In Evangelio, quo utuntur Nazaraei et Ebionitae, (quod nuper in Graecum de Hebraeo sermone transtulimus et quod vocatur a plerisque Matthaei authenticum) homo iste, qui aridam habet manum caementarius scribitur; istius modi vocibus auxilium precans: Caementarius eram manibus victum quaeritans; precor te, Jesu, ut mihi restituas sanitatem, ne turpiter mendicem cibos. (Mat. xii. 10, &c.)

Irenaeus, B. I. 25. 4. (According to Irenaeus, Carpocrates used the following of which ("Quum es cum adversario tuo, &c.") we find apparently the Greek in Epiphanius I. t. 2. h. 27. p. 106. Ὅπερ ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ εἶπε διὰ τῆς παραβολῆς ὅτι Ἰσθι εἰσοῶν τῷ ἀντιδίκῳ σου ἐν ᾧ εἰ ἐν τῷ ὁδοῦ μετ' αὐτοῦ, μὴ πως ὁ ἀντίδικος παραδῷ σε τῷ κριτῇ, καὶ ὁ κριτὴς τῷ ἐπιρρέτῃ, καὶ ὁ ἐπιρρέτης βάλῃ σε εἰς τὴν φυλακὴν. Jerome, Adv. Pelag. B. III. c. 2. (Vallars. Vol. II. p. 768.) In Evangelio juxta Hebraeos, quod Chaldaico quidem Syroque sermone, sed Hebraicis literis scriptum est, quo utuntur usque hodie Nazareni secundum Apostolos, sive ut plerique autumant juxta Matthaeum, quod et in Caesariensi habetur Bibliotheca, narrat historia: Ecce mater Domini et fratres ejus dicebant ei: Johannes Baptista baptizat in remissionem peccatorum: eamus et baptizemur ab eo. Dixit autem eis: Quid peccavi, ut vadam et baptizer ab eo? Nisi forte hoc ipsum quod dixi, ignorantia est.

Ibid. Et in eodem volumine: Si peccaverit, inquit, frater tuus in verbo et satis tibi fecerit, septies in die suscipe eum. Dixit illi Simon discipulus ejus: septies in die? Respondit Dominus et dixit ei: Etiam ego dico tibi, usque septuagies septies. Etenim in prophetis quoque postquam uncti sunt Spiritu Sancto, inventus est sermo peccati. Origen, Comment. in Mat. tom. XV. § 14. p. 672. (Migne, Vol. III. p. 1293.) Scriptum est in Evangelio quodam, quod dicitur secundum Hebraeos: si tamen placet alicui recipere illud non ad auctoritatem, sed ad manifestationem propositae quaestionis. "Dixit," inquit, "ad eum alter divitum: Magister, quid bonum faciens vivam? Dixit ei: Homo, leges et prophetas fac. Respondit ad eum: Feci. Dixit ei: Vade, vende omnia quae possides et divide pauperibus et veni sequere me. Coepit autem dives scalpere caput suum, et non placuit ei. Et dixit ad eum Dominus: Quomodo dicis, legem feci et prophetas? quoniam scriptum est in lege, Diliges proximum tuum sicut te ipsum; et ecce, multi fratres tui, filii Abrahae, amicti sunt stercore morientes prae fame; et domus tua plena est multis bonis, et non egreditur omnino aliquid ad eos. Et conversus dixit Simoni discipulo suo sedenti apud se: Simon, fili Joanne, facilius est camelum intrare per foramen acus, quam divitem in regnum coelorum." (Mat. xix. 16-24.)<sup>12</sup>

<sup>1</sup> James. See Introduction, "Apocrypha," and note on page 156. The argument on Canonicity founded on those Apocryphal Books—the Protevangelium and the Acts of Pilate—is that they are obviously expansions of our Gospels, and that—they being in existence before the middle of the second century—they furnish an argument for the antiquity of the Gospels.

PETER'S DOCTRINE. PETER'S PREACHING.

<sup>1</sup> On the works ascribed to Peter see the Testimony of Eusebius, before, p. 207. Jerome also in his De Vir. Ill. c. 1 says, "Libri autem ejus, e quibus unus Actorum ejus inscribitur, alius Evangelii, tertius Prædicationis, quartus Apocalypseos, quintus Judicii, inter Apocryphas scripturas reputantur." The decree of Gelasius (see before, p. 24) condemns Peter's Gospel. It appears probable from the extracts in the text that this Gospel taught the ordinary human birth of Jesus; although this is not quite clear. But it agreed with the Protevangelium (the 'Book of James') in regarding the "brethren" of Jesus as sons of Joseph by a former marriage. The 'Nazarenes' who, according to Theodoret, used it, must have been more Jewish than some of their name, since they regarded Christ as only a just man. What Origen quotes from it (regarding Christ not being a bodiless demon) is found in the Nazarene Gospel; and on the whole it seems to have been a recension of the Gospel of the Hebrews. Hilgenf. (N. T. extra Can. rec.) believes it to be older than the Ebionite Gospel. There is a passage in Justin (Dial. c. 106; see before, p. 62, Note 6) where it is said that mention of the change of Peter's name is made ἐν τοῖς ἀποκημονεύμασιν αὐτοῦ. From the immediately following reference to the change of the names of the Sons of Zebedee (which is only found in Mark) it has been usually supposed that Justin refers to Mark's Gospel as his authority. This is not clear, however. There is no reason to deny that from this passage alone a good case could be made out for there being a book called 'Peter's Memoirs' (although those who plead that case are almost bound to hold that "Memoirs" is the equivalent of "Gospel"), and we are not concerned to deny that Justin might have known and quoted such a book; but it is scarcely possible on this one fact to build a whole theory as to the nature of Peter's Gospel, and still less is it possible to refer to that Gospel all Justin's quotations from 'The Memoirs.' The 'Doctrine of Peter' Διδαχὴ Πέτρον was probably the same work. There is another name, Peter's Preaching, Κήρυγμα Πέτρον, which is sometimes called 'The Preaching of Peter and Paul.' The words of Lactantius are evidence of its existence in his day: "Sed et futura illis aperuit omnia, quae Petrus et Paulus Romae praedicaverunt, et ea praedicatio in memoriam scripta permansit, in qua cum alia mira tum etiam hoc . . ." (here follows a prediction of the fall of the Jews and their cities). It is chiefly known through the frequent quotations of it by Clem. Alex., some of which, referring to the New Testament, are in our text. Origen (Comment. in Joann. t. 13. § 17. Migne, Vol. IV. p. 424) says that Heracleon quoted it. Both Eusebius and Jerome distinguish the 'Preaching of Peter' from the 'Gospel of Peter.' What relation it had to the account of Peter's Preaching in the Clementines is a difficult question. The extracts which remain in Clem. Alex. and others do not identify the two works, nor is Hilgenfeld (Nov. Test. extr. Can. rec. p. 55) able to make out a case for the identity. Credner ascribed the Preaching to the end of the First Century; and regarded it (Hilgenfeld following him) as the parent of the Homilies and Recognitions. See the whole discussion in Credner's Beiträge, p. 348, &c.). An Apocalypse of Peter is mentioned in the Muratorian Fragment.

Origen, De Orat. 2. (Migne, Vol. I. p. 417.) Εἵπε γὰρ ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ· Αἰεῖτε τὰ μεγάλα καὶ τὰ μικρὰ ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται, καὶ αἰεῖτε τὰ ἐπορεύοντα καὶ τὰ ἐπίγεια προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν. (Mat. vi. 33.)

Comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. I. 24. p. 416. Αἰεῖσθε γὰρ, φησὶ, τὰ μεγάλα καὶ τὰ μικρὰ ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται.

Cod. D. Luke VI. 4 &c. (from Tisch. Gr. Test). Τῇ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ θεασάμενός τινα ἐργαζόμενον τῷ σαββάτῳ εἶπεν αὐτῷ. Ἄνθρωπε, εἰ μὲν οἶδας τί ποιεῖς, μακάριος εἶ· εἰ δὲ μὴ οἶδας, ἐπικατάρατος καὶ παραβάτης τοῦ νόμου.

Id. in Mat. xx. 28 &c. (from Tisch. Gr. Test). Ὑμεῖς δὲ ζητεῖτε ἐκ μειζροῦ ἀξίῃσαι καὶ ἐκ μείζονος ἑλαττον εἶναι. Εἰσερχόμενοι δὲ καὶ παρακληθέντες δειλῆσαι μὴ ἀνακλείνεσθαι εἰς τοὺς ἐξέχοντας τόπους, μήποτε ἐνδοξότερός σου ἐλελθῇ καὶ προσελθὼν ὁ δειμνοκλήτωρ εἰπῇ σοι· Ἔτι κάτω χώρει, καὶ κατασχευθήσῃ. Ἐὰν δὲ ἀναλεισθῇς εἰς τὸν ἥμενον τόπον, καὶ ἐπελθῇ σου ἥμιον ἐρεῖ σοι ὁ δειμνοκλήτωρ· Σύναγε ἔτι ἄνω, καὶ εἶσαι σοι τοῦτο χρήσιμον.

Origen, Hom. in Jerem. XX. 3. (Migne, Vol. III p. 531.) Legi alicubi—quasi Salvatore dicente—et quaero sive quis personam figuravit Salvatoris, sive in memoriam adduxerit ac verum sit hoc quod dictum est—ait autem ipse Salvator, “Qui juxta me est, juxta ignem est: qui longe a me est, longe est a regno.”
